Compromise on Bonus Allotting 2.66 Billions Placed Before Senate

Roosevelt-Backed Plan Taxes Experts' Ability to Explain.

Veterans' Groups Cool to Proposal

Hearings on Bill to Pay Men in Cash, Bonds Open Monday.

By Robert C. Albright.

A highly complicated plan for paying off a $2,660,000,000 soldiers' bonus in negotiable bonds and in cash, streamlined to meet with White House approval and to block an inflationary House bill, was introduced in the Senate yeserday.

Offered by Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee, the so-called compromise measure precipitated a confusion of conflicting interpretations that taxed congressional and Veterans Bureau experts to meet and explain.

Veterans' organizations, which have been driving for bonus cash payment, said it does not go far enough, but makes some concessions. Representative Wright Patman, of Texas, author of the House cash bonus bill, confined himself to four words: "It is not satisfactory."

Hearings Start Monday.

Harrison scheduled Finance Committee hearings on the bill beginning Monday, when Patman and representatives of the veterans' groups will appear. If approved in its present form, the Finance Committee chairman thinks the President will sign it. He discussed its terms at the White House Sunday.

The bill, which would add approximately $500,000,000 to the cost of the present law, would give veterans the amount of their adjusted service credits with interest compounded from Armistice Day, November 11, 1918, instead of from 1925.

Veterans demanding payment immediately would receive 3 per cent negotiable bonds, and a small cash margin, in return for certificates. If no loans have been made, these bonds would reach the original maturity value of certificates in 1942.

Meanwhile, veterans could sell them for cash. To protect the veterans from fraud by unscrupulous persons, a $10,000 penalty is provided for anyone who purchases the bonds for less than face value within six months after issuance.

A small premium is provided for veterans who hold their certificates. These former soldiers, without any further application on their part, would receive 4 per cent compounded annually on their adjusted service credits, until 1945. A veteran holding a certificate due to mature at $1,000, for example, would receive $1,115 instead in 1945, under the Harrison plan.

The American Legion, which has supported the Vinson cash payment bill, sidetracked in the House, last night was busy analyzing the measure.

In the absence of Frank Belgrano, national commander, no official statement was authorized, although one legion official strongly stated his opposition to the compromise.

James E. Van Zandt, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, said it was short of that group's requirements.

Spokesmen for both groups expressed disappointment that the measure made no provision for cancellation of interest charges on loans.

Members of one conservative House bonus bloc said the bill is almost identical with one introduced several weeks ago in the

5 Dead, 1 Missing In Wreck of Flyer

Passengers Only Jostled in Nova Scotia Disaster.

By the Associated Press.

Heatherton, N. S., April 17.—A speeding express shot off the Canadian National Railways track near this village in eastern Nova Scotia today and carried at least five persons to death. A sixth man was missing. It was feared he had been crushed beneath the locomotive as it leaped the rails and almost buried itself in the earth 15 feet below the track.

The dead:

Lawrence McIntosh, 50, engineer, Halifax.

Charles McDonald, 40, fireman, Mulgrave, N. S.

The missinbg man was Edward Horoboner, a Russian from North Sydney, who was riding blind baggage.

Of about 50 passengers on the express, only 3 were hurt. Their injuries were slight.

Roosevelt Hurls First Ball; Home Club Scores 3 Runs in First.

By Shirley Povich.

The strains of the National Anthem scarcely had subsided at Griffith Stadium yesterday when the Nationals fell upon Philadelphia pitching in the first inning to preserve for President Roosevelt his now notable record of never having seen a Washington team defeated.

Dignity, as represented by the Chief Executive and Washington officialdom that flanked the flag-bedecked box of the presidential party, contrasted with the almost immediate indignities upon Pitcher Merritt Cain, while 21,000 persons cheered the Nats' victorious assault.

In one sustained offensive in that first inning, three Washington runs crossed the plate. The Athletics never recovered from that blow. Along about the cocktail hour, the pitching of Washington's Earl Whitehill soured to the extent that he was removed from the game, but victory ultimately came to the Nats by the score of 4 to 2.

The score of the Nats' American League debut should read actually: Washington 4, Jimmy Foxx 2, for it was the potent war-club swung by the Philadelphia catcher that cheated the Nats of a shut-out and reinstated the Athletics in the ball game.

Darling Scores Game Neglect; Ready to Quit

Administration, Congress Broke Promises, Says Survey Chief.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

J. N. (Ding) Darling, Biological Survey chief, yesterday assailed the Administration for failing to carry out his wild-game conservation program.

Darling, known the country over for his newspaper cartoons, said he had been at work for more than a year without being able to stir up more than lip service from members of Congress, Cabinet members and other Government officials. He said he was "ready to quit" unless matters were corrected "very rapidly and very soon."

Darling entered the Administration after having served on President Roosevelt's special committee on wild life restoration.

A member of the nominating committee at the 1932 Republican convention in Chicago, Darling took an active part in the Republican campaign, but joined the Administration setup because of its attention to wild-life matters.

Three Points Cited.

He said yesterday his feeling was principally on three points:

1. Failure of Congress to include wild-life restoration activities in the works relief bill.

2. "Dissolution" of the Bureau of Biological Survey by the failure of other departments and bureaus to act on its recommendations.

3. Inaction on required legislation for wild life.

"There has been a great expectancy built up among sportsmen and conservationists during the past year," he declared. "Great promises have been made and hopes have run high but, despite the fact that President Roosevelt has supported

1 Dead, 4 Hurt as Picketers, Unarmed, Rush Ohio Factory

By the Associated Press.

Toronto, Ohio, April 17.—Shots fired into a group of strike pickets killed one man and wounded four others at the Kaul Clay Co. plant today.

A volley of bullets met a crowd of about 100 strikers as they rushed toward a building where 18 imported workers were located.

Prosecutor Arthur L. Hooper ordered all firearms confiscated and summoned six of the 21 guards on duty at the plant to report for questioning tomorrow morning.

Hooper said he had not decided whether to call the grand jury to investigate the shooting. He and Sheriff Ray Long said they expected no further trouble.

James J. Dyer, general manager of the plant, which resumed operations Monday in an attempt to break the month-old strike resulting from a wage dispute, said work would be suspended indefinitely.

Andy Latiska, 30, of Port Homer, a clay worker and father of two children, was killed.

The wounded:

Andy Straka, 29, of Toronto, a picket, shot in the body. He is in an East Liverpool hospital, where his condition was reported as not serious.

Roosevelt Hart, 32, Negro, of Toronto, a picket, shot in the side.

George Romey, a mill worker of Toronto, struck in the hand by a stray bullet. He was not a picket.

Nearly 100 shots were fired in the brief skirmish, Deputy Sheriff Charles Merryman said. He stated the firing came from the company plant.

Before being taken to East Liverpool, Straka also asserted that all of

Double Rule Set to Guard Works Fund

Special Board to Allot, Regular Agencies to Spend Cash.

Louisiana Aid Money Is Taken From Long Control.

By Felix Bruner.

Two separate groups will control expenditure of the $4,880,000,000 works relief fund, President Roosevelt indicated yesterday.

The first was described as a "round-table" group, representing the Government, business and other interests which will recommend allotments.

The second will consist of established Government agencies which will supervise actual work.

The President repeated that, in the last analysis, he will be responsible for allotments. At the same time, he indicated that most of the allotments will be in the form of loans, with the purpose of seeing to it that the Government gets back as much money as possible.

Meanwhile, the controversy between the Administration and Senator Huey P. Long over works projects and relief in Louisiana resulted in revelation that the Government already has taken over direct supervision of relief expenditures in that State. Secretary of Interior Ickes has threatened to withdraw works funds if Long "intended to use them to build up his political machine."

Last week, it was revealed, the Emergency Relief Administration took aid expenditures out of the hands of State officials. The action was similar to that recently taken in Ohio, but no charges of irregularities were made in Louisiana.

In most of the States money is allotted by the Relief Administration and spent by the States. Following discovery of alleged irregularities in Ohio, Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, named his own representative to do the spending. He quietly did the same thing in Louisiana. The administrator there is Frank H. Peterman, whose authority covers the whole State, including municipal and parish expenditures.

Plan Count of Jobless.

President Roosevelt revealed that one of the first activities under the works relief program will be a census of unemployed. Estimates of the number of unemployed have been made by the Labor Department and the American Federation of Labor, but no actual count ever has been made.

Later Secretary of Commerce Roper announced that a committee of three had been named by the President to make definite plans for the census. The committee includes Roper, Secretary of Labor Perkins and Hopkins. Roper said a report, including an outline of plans and suggestions as to information to be sought, would be given to the President within a week. He said the committee already had held one meeting.

The President expressed the opinion that there had been considerable misstatement concerning the number of unemployed and that he was seriously considering putting "white collar" workers on the job of determining the exact extent of unemployment. He suggested that such a census should be made as of a given date, so that shifting conditions would not be confusing. He estimated that such a census would cost from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000.

Roper said he believed the census would employ approximately 100,000 persons for a brief period. He placed the cost at $13,500,000. Besides determining the number, Roper indicated that the census would classify unemployed, determine work for which they are fit-

NRA Defense In Court Up To Richberg

Firestone Company Gets Injunction to Prevent Loss of 'Eagle.'

Donald R. Richberg, in his dual capacity as head of the NRA and chief counsel of the NRA, will argue in behalf of the constitutionality of the national industrial recovery act before the United States Supreme Court May 2, the Department of Justice announced yesterday.

Taking Richberg at his word—he repeatedly has made the statement he would like to present the case for the recovery act—Attorney General Cummings has made him a Special Assistant Attorney General and given him the job. Associated with Richberg will be Solicitor General Stanley Reed.

The case is that of the Government against the A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation, of Brooklyn, and members of the company, charged with violation of the recovery act. Constitutionality of the act is involved. Richberg has described the case as "almost perfect."

Court Case Lost.

Meanwhile, the NRA lost another court fight when Justice Jennings Bailey, of the District Supreme Court, held that the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., of Akron, was entitled to a temporary injunction restraining NRA from removing its Blue Eagle.

Justice Bailey added, however, that he would refuse to restrain the Labor Relations Board from referring its findings on the American Federation of Labor's complaint against the company to NRA's compliance division.

The case grew out of refusal of the Firestone company to conduct an election ordered by the labor board. Last week an agreement was reached that prevented a strike of Firestone employes.

An agreement entered into between the labor board and the NRA in which the latter stipulated it would act without delay on any recommendations by the board formed the basis for the injunction, Justice Bailey said.

"As long as that agreement is in force, the Recovery Board can not properly exercise its discretion," he said.

Earlier Injunction.

The granting of the temporary injunction followed by a few days the granting of a preliminary injunction obtained by Firestone to stop imminent loss of the eagle. That injunction was granted on the showing that the rubber company might sustain "irreparable loss" through removal of the insignia pending a judicial determination by the courts.

Attorneys for the company contended the company had been notified that, unless it ceased to recognize and support a "conference plan" which had been adopted by its employes to select persons who were to deal with the management in negotiations as to hours and pay, it would be deprived of its eagle.

The company said its employes were satisfied with the conference plan and should not be molested by the labor board.

D. A. R. Elects Officers Today; Leader Is Chided for 'Snub'

Mme. Cantacuzene-Grant Rebukes Mrs. Magna for Shunning Mrs. Gillentine's Reception; Mrs. Becker Urges Adequate Defense.

The Daughters of the American Revolution passed the half-way mark in their forty-fourth annual congress yesterday, all pointed for the triennial election of officers today.

The third day's three sessions—morning, afternoon and night—were the most exciting since the convention of 3,300 delegates and alternates from every State and possession in the Union got under way Monday.

Mme. Julia Cantacuzene-Grant, granddaughter of Gen. U. S. Grant, threw the morning meeting in Constitution Hall into an uproar when she criticized from the floor Mrs. Russell William Magna, retiring president general, for allegedly snubbing Mrs. Flora Myers Gillentine, a candidate for Mrs. Magna's office.

Featuring the afternoon session were the addresses delivered by Mrs. William A. Becker, Mrs. Gillentine's opponent, and Mrs. Gillentine. Each received about the same volume of applause, which indicates the tightness of the race that the 1,900 voting delegates will be called upon to settle today at the polls, which open at 8 a. m.

The auditorium was filled last night when Mrs. Becker and Mrs. Gillentine, and their respective slates, were placed in nomination. Besides a president general, the electors are to pick seven vice presidents general, a chaplain general, recording secretary general, corresponding secretary general, organizing secretary general, treasurer geneal, registrar general, historian general, librarian general, curator general and reporter general to the Smithsonian Institution.

Mme. Cantacuzene-Grant's entrance into the pre-election battle, which has been gaining momentum daily, came after a St. Louis delegate had demanded a rising vote on eight resolutions which had been submitted. Gen. Grant's granddaughter, who until yesterday had been regarded as a "dark horse" candidate, seconded the motion.

Mrs. Magna at first ruled against such an encroachment upon the D. A. R.'s traditional steam roller rule, but when the parliamentarian upheld the motion of Mrs. John Trigg Moss, the St. Louis delegate, the

Leaders Defy Radical Blocs In Social Vote

Measure Is Thrown Open on Amendments Today Test Strength.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

An explosive minority cutting across party lines will be given a vote in the House today on the radical Townsend and Lundeen amendments to the social security bill.

Observers believed the Democratic leadership had received enough pledges to assure rejection of the so-called "cock-eyed" amendments. Otherwise, they could have been held not germane.

A week's debate was finished yesterday. The omnibus measure, contemplating old-age pensions, unemployment insurance and other social benefits, will be open for amendment for the next two or three days.

Majority strategists were reported to have decided to call up the most controversial amendmenst the first thing today so they would not be reached late some afternoon when many Democrats were away from the floor.

Holds "Nothing to Fear."

"The administration has nothing to fear," observed pipe-smoking Representative Sam D. McReynolds (Democrat), Tennessee, chairman of the committee of the whole, as he announced plans to test strength of the opposition.

Elderly Representative John S. McGroarty (Democrat), California, probably will offer the Townsend amendment, which would call for Federal pensioning of all persons over 60, beginning at $50 and gradually increasing to $200 a month.

Switzes Freed On Spy Charge, Go Into Hiding

Americans Jubilant at End of Long Imprisonment; 23 Sentenced.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Paris, April 17.—Evidence they gave against co-conspirators in an asserted far-flung Soviet spy ring today won freedom for Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gordon Switz, Americans, after 16 months in French prisons on espionage charges.

The spy plot was described as the largest uncovered in France since the World War.

A court trying the East Orange, N. J., couple and 27 others for the last month recognized the Switzes' guilt, but decreed they be "exempted from punishment" for the help they gave France in tracking down the spy ring's members.

Heavy sentences were dealt out to 23 other defendants pronounced guilty.

American Sentenced.

Thirteen men and women in court got ten months to five years in prison, their sentences totaling 44 years and 10 months. Ten missing defendants were sentenced in absentia to five years each, totaling 50 years. Fines amounted to 52,300 francs (about $3,500) were assessed August 17. Four were acquitted.

Among those sentenced in absentia was Mrs. Pauline Levine, an American, who has never been apprehended.

After sentences were pronounced the defendants were taken from the courtroom, the Switzes, heavily guarded against possible reprisals, being driven in separate taxis to their respective jails where they were set free tonight after the necessary formalities of "signing out."

After their release, the American

Clipper's Flight Blazes Way For TransPacific Air Service

By the Associated Press.

Honolulu, April 17.—Preliminary commercial air service between the American mainland and Hawaii was inaugurated today when the huge Pan-American clipper alighted here to complete a swift, sure flight from California.

The big plane went through on schedule like a limited train on a time table.

Her flight marked the beginning of a new era in American aviation—regular service all the way across the Pacific—to be established this summer.

She lopped exactly seven hours off the previous record and had to slow down occasionally and even leave her course to make her time 17 hours 45 minutes for the 2,400-mile all-water route.

Although the flying clipper was sandwiched between enormous cloud strata high in the air for hundreds of miles, her personnel always knew exactly where they were, for they followed an invisible but certain guiding force—radio waves.

She landed at Pearl Harbor at 7:57 a. m. (1:25 p. m. Eastern standard time), three minutes ahead of scheduled time. Her crew of six stepped ashore unfatigued, freshly shaven and conventionally clothed, much as they would have left a Pullman car after an overnight journey.

Thousands cheered as the flying boat dipped in a graceful salute and settled to the harbor surface.

Thus ended the first commercial flight between the mainland and Hawaii, for the clipper carried a "pay load" of more than 100 pounds of air mail.

Phrase on Peace Treaty Breach Viewed as Hint of Sanctions.

Hitler, Angered, Plans Firm Reply

Censure Interpreted as Warning Zone Must Not Be Fortified.

The European Situation.

The League of Nations' rebuke of the Reich on breaking the peace treaty by re-arming was interpreted at Geneva as a notice that the league members will fight if Hitler attempts to fortify the demilitarized Rhineland zone.

Press dispatches said Hitler "hit the roof" when word of the council's action was taken to him.

France reported full accord with Russia in principle on the two nations' proposed mutual aid pact. Signing is set for early next month.

England announces her coming naval parleys with Russia and Germany would avoid discussion of fleet ratios as a move to avoid controversy at this time.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Geneva, April 17.—League of Nations circles tonight believed the council, in approving a resolution condemning Germany's lone repudiation of the Versailles treaty, served notice that league members would fight if the Reich violates the Rhineland demilitarized zone by fortifying and reinforcing the area.

The major powers, anticipating that Adolph Hitler's next rearmament move may be the fortification of the Rhineland, inserted a veiled threat in the resolution adopted by the council today, making the league itself guarantee the sanctity of the demilitarized zone, as well as other provisions of the peace treaty.

Great Britain, France and Italy, sponsors of the resolution, discreetly called attention to the importance of the phrase saying repudiation of the treaties, endangering security and peace, entails "all appropriate measures on the part of league members, within the framework of the covenant."

Sanctions Invoked.

This is interpreted as a direct allusion to military and economic sanctions (penalties) under Article 16 of the covenant. Italy and Britain already had reaffirmed their Locarno obligations to aid France if Germany violates the demilitarized zone—but the resolution now puts all 57 league members behind the three-power threat, in the event of such violation.

The league council slammed the door on Germany's early return to Geneva by unanimously adopting the resolution condemning Hitler's military schemes.

A committee immediately was named to put "teeth" in the league covenant, providing automatic penalties for future treaty violations by any power acting alone, as Germany did.

The council's action, prodded by Great Britain, France and Italy over the opposition of smaller powers, was unanimous, Denmark abstaining from voting. Poland reversed herself at the last minute and voted with the rest. The count was 13 to 0. The approval commits the 57 nations beloning to the league to condemnation of the Reich's lone scuttling of the war treaties.

Would Mollify Hitler.

German observers were convinced it is impossible for Germany to participate in the proposed general conference in May, or to return to the league. However, the "Big Three" still hopes to resume private negotiations to mollify Hitler and bring Germany back into the European circle of nations before another war is precipitated by rising animosities.

German circles said they had been informed officially that Berlin will protest energetically against adoption of the resolution. They

His Legislature Warns 3 Judges At Long's Order

All Senator's Bills Voted in Spite of Opposition's Storm of Protest.

By the Associated Press.

Baton Rouge, La., April 17.—A caucas of Senator Huey P. Long's leaders in the House of the Legislature today censured three supreme court justices the Senator had threatened to remove but decided proceedings against them would not be started at this time.

There was opposition storm against the newest "dictatorship" bills of the "Kingfish" in the House as a batch of measures were passed giving the Senator's State administration control over election machinery, Louisiana Federal relief funds and city financing.

The court members, Chief Justice Charles A. O'Neill and Associate Justices Wynne G. Rogers and Fred M. Odom, were censured on the accusation that they "sought to annul about every law for the good and relief of the people that this Legislature has adopted," according to a formal statement issued by Representative Edmund G. Burke, of New Orleans, caucas chairman.

The statement warned that "the Legislature can and most probably will be called to act as the circumstances require." The three justices, whose impeachment was suggested yesterday by Senator Long, have made no reply to the legislative censure.

The lower chamber of the Legislature, after ringing with protests against presence of a militia guard without its doors and against Long's election and Federal relief control bills, passed every measure of importance Louisiana's political boss told it to approve and sent the bills to the Senate.

Last night there was turmoil in the Assembly when Mrs. J. S. Roussel, president of the women's division of the Anti-Long Square Deal Association, was ejected from the House as she waved the American flag and shouted objections to enforcement of a rule to clear spectators from the sidewall railings and off the floor.

Fugitive Identified In Perrot Probe

Bothe Called 'Thin Man' Last Seen With Boy.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 17.—Supervising Police Capt. Thomas Condon announced tonight that Joseph Bothe, 35, inmate of an insane asylum, had been identified as the "thin man" last seen with 4-year-old Richard Max Perrot when the boy disappeared from his home 13 days ago.

The captain said Mrs. Rose Sparr, former landlady of Bothe, made the identification today when she confronted him at the State hospital at Elgin, Ill. Bothe, who escaped from the asylum several years ago, was seized April 8 for questioning in connection with the missing lad, but was freed April 9 when officials were unable to connect him with the case.

Condon reported Mrs. Sparr had seen Bothe get on a street car last April 4 with a four-year-old boy dressed in a green suit and a leather helmet—the clothing worn by little Richard that day.

Bank Bill Held Dictatorship Key

Amos Pinchot, Sees Measure Roosevelt's 'Rubicon'

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—Amos R. E. Pinchot, publicist brother of the former Governor of Pennsylvania, said today that President Roosevelt's decision on pending banking legislation will determine whether or not he is headed toward a dictatorship.

In a letter addressed to Cabinet members, members of Congress, the Federal judiciary and other Government officials, Pinchot said:

"The significance of the impending struggle in Congress over the banking bill lies in the fact that it will disclose the President's true attitude toward the deeper issue between democracy and autocracy.

"If Mr. Roosevelt continues to side with the conservative and hard-money bankers of the East, and if he insists that he, instead of Congress, shall control the monetary system, he will, so to speak, cross his Rubicon."

He complimented the assistance given by lumbermen as a whole, but said, "We have records of retail lumbermen who declined to follow up actual orders uncovered for them."

Between You and Me

Roosevelt Is Santa From Now On; Jobless Census Dilemma; Townsend Plan Deflated.

By Raymond Clapper

From now on, as the $4,880,000,000 work relief program swings into action, the role of Santa Claus will be played by Mr. Roosevelt in person.

Up to now the Santa Claus which nobody would shoot last November has been represented by a syndicate of New Dealers. Sometimes Santa Claus was Ickes, the honest tortoise. Again it would be Hopkins, the leaping hare. Or it would at other times be a vague, impersonal thing known only as "The Administration." Often it was a Senator or Representative who had been hustling around New Deal headquarters in behalf of projects for his constituents.

* * * *

Nothing like this from now on. This is a big league game. It involves important money. When a community receives word from Washington that it has been granted x-millions of dollars for a safety pin census or some even more important work relief project, there will be no doubt about addressing the letter of thanks. It will go straight to the Great White Father himself.

Mr. Roosevelt himself in person is taking the long white whiskers, the red fur-trimmed uniform, and with a strand of sleigh-bells around his neck he will go streaking across the country leaving his gifts. He will be assisted by an advisory committee, a round-table group, which will study some $16,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000 of applications for projects. But as to which will rate as among the neediest cases, Mr. Roosevelt emphasizes that will be his decision.

* * * *

This is a decided shift in strategy. Up to now, Mr. Roosevelt has shown miraculous ability in keeping clear of the accidents which have befallen New Deal activities. When the Blue Eagle was grounded, was Mr. Roosevelt blamed? Of course not. Gen. Johnson became the scapegoat. Was it President Roosevelt who killed those poor little pigs? Certainly not. Secretary Wallace did it. Who was to blame for PWA being so slow? And the Housing Administration.

Even when the gold price-juggling scheme blew up was it Mr. Roosevelt who took the rap? No. On the contrary, he was cheered for exiling Prof. Warren who had sold the idea to him.

Very little litter has been laid on the Roosevelt doorstep because he has had the knack of inspiring dazzling experiments and then quietly moving on, leaving his administrators to take the brickbats.

* * * *

But Mr. Roosevelt is going to stay in the works relief picture. That means several things. It means that Senators and Representatives who want money for their constituents will have to come to him. Everywhere that people are put back at work, it will be a personal Roosevelt achievement. He runs a risk of failure, but nothing ventured, nothing gained, and if all goes even reasonably well for the next year and a half, Mr. Roosevelt logically can be confident that the people won't shoot Santa Claus on election day next year.

* * * *

Many ticklish questions have come up during preparations for the national unemployment census. When is a person to be counted as unemployed? You say when he isn't working. But what about the half million college students who graduate and want to go to work? Shall they, not having worked at all, be counted as unemployed? What about a married woman who, whenever she can find a job, works to help round out her husband's earnings? Should she, if not working, be counted as among the unemployed? When a carpenter out of work gets a job cutting grass should he be listed as an unemployed carpenter or an employed grass cutter?

* * * *

When the Townsend old age pension plan burst on Washington last fall, its promoters claimed they had 20,000,000 signers. That was almost as many persons as voted for President Roosevelt in 1932. Senators and Representatives shook in their boots. Business men trembled for the future when this measure should pass. Well, it has mostly blown over. It has been completely deflated, chiefly because the passage of time gave Americans common sense time to rise to the surface. That has been one of the healthiest developments in recent months.

By the same token will Huey Long also be deflated in time? Many believe he already has passed his peak since the Hugh Johnson-Huey Long-Father Coughlin radio battle. Some of his intimates are a little concerned over what they think is a sign of slightly cooling popularity.

The Administration has taken over Louisiana relief distribution. Secretary Ickes came right out and ridiculed Long as "Emperor of Louisiana" and referred mockingly to the Louisiana "Longislature" and the sun came to as usual the next day.

* * * *

When the Townsendites discovered they were on the run, they rushed in with a substitute which scaled down the ridiculous $200-a-month pension to a modest one of about $50 a month and apparently excluded from its benefits persons owning property or having incomes. The original plan was to give the pension to all over 60 so long as they refrained from gainful work. They might retain their wealth if they had any.

All of which indicates that even among the crackpots the brain storm is subsiding.

The mail brought in to one Government department a proposal for checking dust storms by building artificial mountains to check the winds. The plan is to run miles of snow fencing at right angles to the prevailing winds. Dust would bank up against the fence and soon form a ridge. Then another fence would be planted on this ridge and eventually it would be covered with heaping dust. The idea would be to go on indefinitely building up one fence on top of another. Been nothing like it since the Tower of Babel. But no sale.

For the last few days window shoppers along Connecticut avenue have been pausing in front of Underwood & Underwood's to gaze on the large, handsome photographs of President Roosevelt flanked on either side by those of Huey Long and Father Coughlin, all of equal size, looking like three of a kind. Below was a row of smaller photographs, including one of Herbert Hoover.

Yesterday the large pictures of Huey and Father Coughlin were taken down and smaller ones were put in the row beside Hoover's, leaving Mr. Roosevelt alone above.

President Sets Double Control Over Relief Bill

ted and reveal other valuable facts.

President Roosevelt said very rapid progress has been made in formulating plans for work relief, but indicated that no actual work could be started immediately.

He said Secretary Ickes had reported on new information that will be required before allotments can be made. He said that where work is to be done by a municipality or other local agency information will be required as to the number of men who can be employed and the time in which the project can be completed.

Only Needy to Get Jobs.

He said Hopkins is working on three plans:

1. An absolutely definite list of the unemployed everywhere.

2. Rechecking of this list to see that, so far as it can be reasonably accomplished, only needy people on relief will be employed.

3. Division of the country into districts so that the number of unemployed in each district and the number of projects available can be determined. He said these districts will vary in geographical size according to density of population, but that they would not follow the lines of congressional districts.

In discussing the proposed set-up of a "round-table conference," the President said that he wanted to be sure every possible proposal receives a fair hearing. He said this "round-table" group would receive recommendations from Government departments and from outside. He said he wished to see to it that valuable small projects were not crowded out by larger ones.

Various Government departments, the President indicated, will have charge of supervising actual construction. He emphasized that two separate functions are involved, allotment of money and supervision of construction.

Details of the set-up, the President indicated, will be announced within a few days.

In discussing the proposal to put out as much money as possible on the basis of loans rather than of grants, the President said that he did not know whether there would be any grants. Under the PWA, both loans and grants have been made. Many States, he said, already have developed good plans for relief projects.

U. S. to Buy Materials.

There are, however, the President indicated, no projects that can be started immediately. He said it would require a month or two to perfect plans. Grade-crossing elimination, he indicated, probably will take more time than other work projects. He said some States and some railroads are ready, but that others are not, and no definite allotments can be made now.

He pointed out that grade-crossing elimination involves purchase of land and materials. He said, however, that he hoped this work would be under way by fall.

The CCC, however, will be able to absorb some of the unemployed immediately. It is being recruited up to a strength of 600,000.

Although much of the relief money will be spent on a loan basis, it was reported that the Government is planning to assist in the purchase of materials, which will be a large factor in putting 3,500,000 persons to work under the President's plan.

It was reported that Admiral Christian J. Peoples, who has charge of Treasury purchases, will have a large part in material buying.

Meanwhile, the PWA has been going ahead with some new projects. The latest to be announced was a $6,000,000 housing program in Detroit. The Department of Justice yesterday started land condemnation proceedings in connection with this project.

The South Carolina Public Service Authority and the State's delegation in Congress agreed yesterday to carry the fight for a $36,000,000 public works allotment for development of the Santee-Cooper power project directly to President Roosevelt.

Famous Surgeon Dead.

Trio Born to Girl, 17; Mate: 'I'll Be Darned'

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, April 17.—Seventeen-year-old Mrs. Estelle Carranza gave birth today to triplets—two girls and a boy—in what doctors believed to be an extremely rare case for so young a mother.

At the county jail, Joseph Carranza, father of the triplets who is serving a 180-day sentence for disturbing the peace, exclaimed:

"Well, I'll be darned."

The babies, premature, were placed in incubators.

Doctors said the family was "doing fine."

Chilly Weather Slows Business In Retail Stores

U. S. Survey of Country Notes Sag Here as Elsewhere.

Retail trade in most of the United States failed to move forward last week, the weekly business survey of the Commerce Department indicated yesterday.

Unseasonable weather was blamed. Bank clearings decreased, but maintained a level above that of last year.

Not much change was reported in the employment situation, although some slight increases, not large enough to indicate a trend, were noted.

There were some indications of slightly improved building conditions and a seasonal upturn in real estate.

The report for Washington said:

"Adverse weather conditions caused department store sales to decrease 6 per cent, as compared with the previous week, but showed a gain of the same amount over the same week last year. Bank clearings were 10 per cent less than the previous week and 23 per cent higher than a year ago.

"The telephone company reported 405 installations as compared with 306 for the previous week and 408 for the same week a year ago. Tourist activities were reflected in the number of visitors to the Washington Monument, admissions for the week being 17,311, compared with 20,711 the previous week and 17,716 the same week a year ago."

Announcement was made that industry in Greater Detroit has pledged expenditures of $64,250,000 for plant repairs, extensions and equipment during 1935 with another $31,000,000 to be spent for the same purpose elsewhere in southern Michigan.

Noisy Minority Gets Its Chance At Pension Bill

Strategists Open Measure for Amendments to Test Strength.

The scheme would be financed by a 2 per cent transaction tax.

The section of the Doughton bill for which the Townsend proposal will be advanced as a substitute would authorize Uncle Sam to pension the needy over 65 up to $15 a month on a strict matching basis with the States.

Diminutive Representative William P. Connery, jr. (Democrat), Massachusetts, will submit the Lundeen amendment, asking payment of the average prevailing wage to all unemployed, the benefit to be not less than $10 a week plus $3 for each dependent.

No Hope for Jobless.

In its present form the Doughton bill would authorize no gratuities to those now jobless, but would set up a system of pay-roll taxes to finance unemployment insurance for persons now working who lose their jobs in the future.

Another amendment frowned on by the New Deal, championed by Representative Isabella Greenway (Democrat), Arizona, may be voted on today. A modified version of the Townsend scheme, it would have the Federal Government pay old-age pensions up to $25 a month on the basis of five Federal dollars for each State dollar.

Several other radical schemes are expected to be voted down in short order.

Vigorous defense of the Doughton measure by Representative Fred M. Vinson, long-haired Kentuckian, marked yesterday's debate.

"They say $30 a month is an inadequate old-age pension," he cried. "There is nothing in this bill that prevents the States from raising their contribution if they desire."

Vinson Chides G. O. P.

Vinson poked fun at the seven Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee for voting "present" when the bill was reported out.

"I don't see how they could sit in the committee sessions for two or three months," he said, "without deciding whether they were for or against the bill."

$2,660,000,000 Bonus Measure Goes to Senate

Roosevelt-Supported Bill Taxes the Ability of Experts to Explain.

Like Tydings Bill.

Others saw a strong similarity with the Tydings plan—the original bond payment proposal.

After submitting the bill, Senator Harrison hied himself off to Griffith Stadium with other Senate baseball fans. He said his bill is a sure method of forestalling a White House bonus veto, will not result in new taxes and will not cause inflation.

The bugaboo of general World War pensions, which the Administration fears will supersede the bonus drive, is met by the following provisions:

"It is hereby expressly declared to be the policy of Congress that there should not be any general pension laws enacted for veterans of the World War or their dependents, and nothing in this act shall be construed as indicating a tendency toward a contrary policy, or as implying that favorable consideration will be given at any time to a change in the policy hereby declared."

This would not affect disability allowances, hospitalization, vocational rehabilitation, etc.

Operation Explained.

The proposed act would operate as follows: If a veteran desired to surrender his certificate he would turn it in to the Veterans' Administration and receive in return (in the form of a bond) the amount of his adjusted service credit and 4 per cent interest from 1918 up to the time he gave up his certificate.

The bond, bearing 3 per cent interest, would be negotiable, but would mature only at the call of the Treasury. Thus, a veteran having a certificate with a 1945 maturity value of $1,000 could receive immediately a $750 bond and a $25 balance in cash. If he waited until 1942 to turn in his certificate, he would receive a $1,000 bond. If he never turned it in, he would receive $1,115 in cash in 1945.

Taking a case where a veteran had borrowed up to 50 per cent on a similar certificate, with a $1,000 1945 maturity value, it would operate thus: Under the present plan, this veteran would receive $184.09 in 1945. Under the Harrison plan, if he immediately turned in his certificate, he would receive a $150 3 per cent bond, and $75 in cash. If he waited until 1945, he would receive $300 in cash.

Disallowance Overcome.

The Harrison bill, however, disallows a 5 per cent grant allowed veterans by Congress because of deferred payment, but its sponsors point out this is more than overcome by other more liberal provisions of the proposed act.

Veterans' Administration experts estimate there are 3,725,074 certificates outstanding with a total maturity value (excluding loans) of $3,677,030,810. They are holding approximately 2,898,000 of these certificates against loans estimated at $1,653,000,000. The present value of certificates to veterans was computed at $2,100,000,000, whereas the Harrison plan would provide a surrender value of $2,660,000,000. The Administration holds about $1,360,000,000 in its redemption fund, leaving $1,300,000,000 still to be raised to meet the Harrison proposal, should it become law.

Experts said it would require only about $88,000,000 in immediate cash to meet the Harrison plan, and they have that in hand.

Defending payment in bonds bearing 3 per cent interest, compounded semiannually, Harrison pointed out that "as Government bonds bearing this rate are now selling at a premium and are greatly in demand, such veterans as may desire to convert these securities into cash will find a ready market for them."

"While the time at which the maturity value may be procured will be greatly accelerated, the veterans will have the benefit of retaining the insurance protection until the date of the maturity value is reached," the Mississippian explained. "Even after the date of the maturity value is reached, the proposal gives to the veteran the right to retain his certificates until January 1, 1945, at 4 per cent interest, compounded annually."

How Compromise Bonus Would Pay

Following is how the Harrison compromise bonus plan would pay off an average adjusted service certificate, having a $1,000 maturity value:

| | If redeemed immediately | If redeemed in 1945 |
|---|---|---|
| Borrowed against, up to 50% | $150 in bonds, $75 cash | $300 cash |

Following is how present law pays off in same case:

| | If redeemed Immediately | If redeemed in 1945 |
|---|---|---|
| Unborrowed against | 50 % loan | $1,000 |
| Borrowed against, up to 50% | No funds | $184.09 |

the program from the very beginning, it has been blocked, hampered, sidetracked and pigeonholed until it begins to appear that it is almost useless to continue."

Claims Funds Denied.

Darling said "Congress won't appropriate money to enforce present laws and it ignores even the minimum demands for wild life which have been made and the reasons why we want them."

"In setting aside $4,880,000,000 for work and relief, Congress failed to include water fowl and game restoration among the uses to which it could be put, although men can be employed on such projects just as easily as on many others," he said. "And this happened despite the fact that I talked with every member of the committee personally and was assured of their cooperation."

British Debt Good, Says Chamberlain

Obligation to U. S. Stands, Chancellor Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

London, April 17.—Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, replying to labor attacks on his 1935-36 balanced budget, told the House of Commons tonight Great Britain has not repudiated war debts owed to the United States.

Labor members yesterday accused Chamberlain of balancing his books only by chucking the big war debt "into the limbo of forgotten things."

The House passed the budget, which estimates revenues for the fiscal year at $3,677,830,000 and expenditures, at $2,425,000 less, without division, after Chamberlain, speaking in its defense, said:

"I do not think anybody does any service to this country by suggesting that the American war debt is on exactly the same footing as its commercial debts, nor do I think it is wise for anyone to suggest that our debt has been repudiated. That is not the case."

He concluded with the statement: "Today we see a picture of 80 per cent prosperity in England."

Victim of $200,000 Plot Identifies One as Hide-Out Keeper.

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, April 17.—The Government today marked up identifications against two of the ten defendants on trial for the $200,000 Edward G. Bremer kidnaping.

Bremer, in his second day on the witness stand, pointed out Harold Alderton, in whose Bensenville (Ill.) house he allegedly was held, and Elmer Farmer, of the same town, as participants in the kidnap conspiracy.

Prisoner Shouts Denial.

John Brennan, a Federal agent, was well into his testimony in corroboration of Bremer when Alderton shouted "it's a lie!"

Brennan was giving his version of a conversation Bremer testified he held with the two Bensenville men in the county jail here after their capture.

Bremer said he discussed with them the fish Alderton served him during the 21 days he was held prisoner by the gang, and related that Farmer appeared surprised at discovering that his "guest" for the three-week period was the abduction victim.

Brennan just concluded testifying that Alderton told him on the jail visit that Arthur (Doc) Barker, another of the ten on trial; Alvin Karpis and Harry Campbell, fugitives, and two others took part in the kidnaping, when Alderton cried out his protest.

Brennan said that other alleged kidnap conspirators named by Alderton were George Zeigler, Chicago, since slain, and William Weaver, known as "Heavy," who is also still sought along with Karpis and Campbell.

Money Passed in Cuba.

Meanwhile, it was learned from Federal officials, who declined to be quoted, that $100,000 of the ransom money had been passed in Havana, Cuba. George F. Sullivan, United States district attorney, had declared earlier in court that $57,000 had been passed in Chicago.

Breme, who completed his testimony in the morning session, also identified pieces of wallpaper taken from the room where the Government says he was held.

Leon G. Rose, Chicago photographer, identified pictures of the interior of the Alderton house, and Raymond C. Suran, Department of Justice agent at Chicago, identified sketches he made of the hideout as the Government pushed on with its case.

Bill to Extend Capitol Lauded To Committee

David Lynn, Charles Moore Indorse Measure; Further Hearing Today.

The House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds yesterday heard Charles Moore, chairman of the Fine Arts Commission, and David Lynn, architect of the Capitol, indorse the bill which passed the Senate to extend the east front of the Capitol.

Representative Montague (Democrat), of Virginia, who has sponsored the House bill for 18 years, also spoke in favor of the measure, which authorizes an expenditure of $3,000,000. Promoters of the legislation hope to get a grant from the Public Works Administration.

Both Moore and Montague pointed out that completion of the Capitol should be considered one of the most important public works projects.

They suggested that eventually the dome should be done over in marble as the bill proposes that the east front be changed from sandstone to marble to conform with newer portions of the building.

The hearing will be continued at 10:30 o'clock this morning with Francis P. Sullivan, consulting architect, as the first witness.

One of Dionne Quints 'Sniffles,' Is Isolated

Callendar, Ont., April 17 (U.P.).—Emilie Dionne, fairest of the Dionne quintuplets, was placed in "solitary confinement" tonight because she contracted a slight head cold.

During the day, while her four pretty sisters basked in the sun, Emilie was in their Dafoe hospital home with the "sniffles."

She will be kept apart from the other quintuplets until she recovers, Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe disclosed.

"The cold is not serious," he said, "but I'm taking no chances."

Meanwhile, Chubby Annette kept pace with her sister, Yvonne, by cutting her second tooth. None of the other three sisters displayed signs of following suit, however. Yvonne and Annette chew happily on their rings with tiny white teeth.

League Rebuke Warns Reich On Rhine Move

Interpreted as Notice Its Members Will Fight if Zone Is Armed.

said Germany will refuse international collaboration as long as it is based on the resolution arising from the Stresa conference.

The Berlin reaction to what the Germans consider an affront was the first major result of the extraordinary council action. The next results may include hurried consultations among numerous states to conclude bilateral security and mutual armed assistance pacts.

The 13 nations which voted for the resolution are Agentina, Chile, Mexico, Spain, Turkey, Italy, France, Britain, Russia, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Australia and Portugal. Denmark abstained when modifications in the French-inspired resolution, which she demanded were rejected.

Debate lasted for hours as each nation's spokesman put his country on record. The vote was over in a few minutes.

French Foreign Minister Pierre Laval, father of the resolution, smiled broadly when the unanimous count was announced.

The council's momentous session convened at 11 a. m., and statements by the various delegates occupied most of two hours. The council adjourned until 5 p. m.

Committee Announced.

It met then to announce appointment of this committee to reinforce the league covenant, as provided for under the regulation: France, Russia, Spain, Italy, Britain, Portugal, Canada, Chile, Turkey, Poland, Holland, Yugoslavia and Hungary.

The resolution called for a committee to propose "measures to render the league covenant more effective in the organization of security and to define particularly the economic and financial measures, which might be applied in future should a state, whether a member of the league or not, endanger peace by direct repudiation of its international obligations."

Sir John Simon, during debate, resolutely fought all attempts to amend the text of the resolution, contending any change would weaken it, adding, "We should not spread our efforts over a wide field."

Revenge Hinted as Aim.

Litvinoff, obviously thinking of Japan, asked elimination of the phrase which confined future penalties to violations of treaties in Europe. Failing, he approved the resolution and accused Germany of cherishing hopes of a conquest of revenge.

The council adjourned until May 20, its regular session, after naming the committee. The committee is to report back at that date—which coincides also with the proposed general parley at Rome on the Danubian pact and the league assembly meeting to consider means of ending the Gran Chaco border war between Paraguay and Bolivia.

Holland Elections Record Nazi Gains

Party Leaders See Success in First Test at Polls.

By the United Press.

Amsterdam, The Netherlands, April 17.—Early tabulations in today's provincial elections indicated the Nazi party candidates in the first Nazi invasion of Holland were widely successful, particularly in the larger cities.

Scattering returns showed they polled between 8 and 10 per cent of the ballots, a result regarded as favorable to the swiftly rising Nazi power in the Netherlands in their first test of strength.

Premier Hendrikus Colyn's conservative coalition bloc suffered considerable losses in initial counts, but at 11 p. m. there seemed to be no appreciable alteration in the party standings.

Interest centered in the election chiefly because it was the first occasion on which the national Socialist (Nazi) party participated in a vote in the Netherlands.

The election also brought into prominence the figure of Holland's would-be "Fuehrer," Dr. A. A. Mussert, the driving personality behind the growing Nazi force in this corner of Europe.

Farm Conference Opens Tomorrow

Peabody to Attend Session Called to Spur Loans.

The first meeting of the National Committee to encourage farm ownership will be held at the Brookings Institution here tomorrow at 10:30 a. m., George Foster Peabody, 83-year-old chairman, announced in Warm Springs, Ga., yesterday.

"I expect to leave Warm Springs for my home in New York, and I shall stop off in Washington for the meeting," Peabody said.

"I believe this meeting will lay the foundation for some of the most constructive agricultural work ever attempted in America—namely, encouraging worthy tenants to become home owners under the program proposed in the Bankhead-Jones farm tenant bill."

couple went into hiding, refusing to discuss their future plans. Switz was smuggled out of Sante prison and disappeared at once, while Mrs. Switz, accompanied by a white-haired man believed to be a relative, went to her lawyer's home, declaring she had nothing to say. Her husband joined her there, both leaving later for an undisclosed destination.

A large crowd assembled at Sante prison to await Switz's release. Authorities decided it was best to send him away quietly to avoid any demonstration.

Mrs. Switz Jubilant.

"No one knows how delighted, how pitifully glad I was when my freedom was announced," Mrs. Switz said. "I am so glad it is all over, so anxious to get home.

"I have spent a long enough time in jail and I will be glad to get back to the United States. Everybody has been extremely nice to me."

A packed and jammed courtroom, in which babies in the arms of two mothers among the defendants who bore their children in jail bawled and cried, listened tensely as Chief Justice Etienne Revol read out details of the crime charged to each defendant.

Switz, calm and composed, stood up in the prisoners' box beside his seated guards, his eyes never wavering from the judge and never looking behind him at his wife.

She stood at first, watching her husband. When he failed to glance her way, she sat down again and gazed at the floor.

Revol began reading the sentences. A sudden hush fell over the courtroom. Even the babies stopped crying.

Canadian Gets 5 Years.

Benjamin Bercowitz, naturalized Canadian, was first to hear his fate. He was given five years and fined 3,000 francs. Subdued whispers of astonishment rustled through the room at its heaviness, though Bercowitz himself was stolidly calm.

Next was Octave Dumoulin, French army colonel, whose wife has constantly attended the trial. He was sentenced to five years and fined 3,000 francs.

At that Mme. Dumoulin rose in the rear of the courtroom and shrieked: "Do you call that justice?"

Then she collapsed, sobbing loudly and repeatedly: "It is not just!"

Mme. Dumoulin wept throughout reading of the remainder of the sentences. Other spectators listened in tense calm.

Marie Mermet, one of the two "prison mothers," only leaned over, whispered to her baby and rocked it in her arms when she was sentenced to three years. A like term was given Chana Salma, the other, who, likewise, displayed no emotion.

Others sentenced were Louis Martin, to five years' imprisonment; Maurice Milice, to jail for four years and a fine of 3,000 francs; Moise Gorin, to jail for 10 months, fine 1,500 francs; Octave Aubry, four years, 2,000 francs; Feribel Strom, four years, 3,000 francs; Mme. Lydia Stahl, a leading figure in the trial, five years, 3,000 francs.

Marie Mermet, three years, 1,000 francs; Marcelle Aubry, two years, 500 francs; Riva Davidovici, two years, 1,000 francs; Chana Salman, three years, 1,000 francs; Douchan Narandisch and Vatroslav Reich were acquitted.

the shots came from the plant. Both he and Merryman said the pickets carried no weapons.

A large crowd was kept at a distance from the plant tonight by Toronto police and deputies in charge of Sheriff Ray Long.

Merryman, a regular county deputy on duty at one of the two gates to the company property, related the following version of the shooting:

"About 1 o'clock a crowd of strikers, 100 or more, came down the railroad tracks from the direction of Port Homer. They came to my gate and demanded admittance and said they wanted to talk to the men in the plant and try and induce them to quit work.

Invaders All Armed.

"I would not allow them to enter and told them to go away before some one got shot. They went to the other gate and were told the same thing. Then they split up and a crowd of them rushed through an unprotected spot along the Kaul property. They rushed toward the main plant, and as they went forward the shooting started.

"I do not know who did the shooting. None of the regular county deputies on guard did any shooting. As the shooting started, the invaders turned and fled. I did not see any weapons on the men who broke into the plant. They hadn't any clubs or bricks, as far as I could see. They seemed determined to go in despite warning to stay out."

Increased pay and recognition for collective bargaining of the United Clay Workers of America have been sought by the strikers.

Canadian Mine Riot Injures 16 Police

By the Associated Press.

Corbin, British Columbia, April 17.—Armed with clubs and stones and some with wives at their sides, 250 pit workers in the Corbin mines attacked a group of police today, wounding 16 of them. Twenty-five rioting strikers nursed cuts and bruises.

Two alleged ringleaders of the mine strikers, J. Falkner and John Press, were arrested after the riot. Falkner is president of the Corbin local of the Mineworkers Union of Canada and Press is secretary.

The injured British Columbia policemen were taken to a hospital suffering scalp wounds and broken arms. Five were believed seriously hurt. Constable J. Aikman had a broken skull.

Others listed as seriously injured were R. B. McKay, J. G. Emsley, R. S. Beck and an officer named Smythe.

The police were attacked while accompanying a group of workers riding in a truck en route to their posts at the mine. One officer was struck with a sledge hammer.

The police charged back, using their sticks, and 25 of the miners were reported nursing injuries. The camp was quiet late this afternoon.

The miners have been on strike since January 20, demanding recognition of their union.

Hitler to Reply Soon to Rebuke In Geneva Vote

Plans to Strike Back as Berlin Resentment Mounts High.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Berlin, April 17.—Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler is preparing to strike back at the European powers who joined in public denunciation of the Reich's re-armament.

It was learned tonight that Der Fuehrer is unwilling to take this snub "lying down" and that Germany probably will make a stiff reply to the League of Nations Council resolution in a few days.

[Der Fuehrer "hit the roof" when word of the council's action was taken to him, an Associated Press dispatch reported.—Editor's note.]

The form of this reply remains conjectural. It may be a speech or a proclamation by Hitler. He is due back from a brief vacation tomorrow or Friday, to celebrate his forty-sixth birthday in Berlin Saturday.

The council's action killed any hope that Germany might return to the league soon. The first reaction in Berlin was one of ostentatious indifference. A government spokesman summed up: "We were not represented at Geneva and its of little concern to us what the league says abouts us."

The action goes deeper than that, however, and resentment is mounting steadily. The unanimity of the council's vote is having a deep moral effect upon the German people and may affect their relations with neighbors for a long time.

The press dubs the council's action as "this Geneva conspiracy," and decries it as a threat to "the Reich's young army."

Bitter resentment is apparent in high party and government circles. Officials made no effort to disguise their serious view of the situation.

However, assurance was given that Berlin will do nothing hastily or under pressure of the present current of excitement. Any talk of Germany's demanding lifting of the Rhineland demilitarized zone clauses in the Versailles treaty was discounted.

Spokesmen in various offices insist Germany intends to fulfill all her international obligations and backs up her offer to enter an eastern European pact of nonaggression as well as an aerial aid pact.

At the same time, it was made abundantly clear that Germany will continue to build up her air, land and sea forces to what she considers the minimum necessary for her defensive security.

Wheat Vote Held Poll for All AAA

Officials Say Ballot Will Decide Entire Set-up.

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, April 17.—John Dexter, AAA official, said today that the coming wheat referendum in which American farmers will decide whether to continue the Administration's adjustment program the next four years "is a referendum on the entire AAA program."

"The AAA has many enemies who would like to see it knocked out," said Dexter, who lives in Bozeman, Mont. "This referendum is an opportunity to do two things—to obtain an honest expression of opinion on the wheat program and to let the farmers speak in unmistakable terms of the AAA program as a whole. It must be impressed upon the wheat producers that this is something more than just a vote on wheat—it is a referendum on the entire program."

5-State Barrier Recommended To Check Dust

1,200 Families Abandon Homes in Utah; Farms to Be Resodded.

Garden City, Kans., April 17 (AP).—Soil erosion experts from five Plains States—the experience of a "black blizzard" fresh in their minds—recommended today that the Kansas dust barrier program be extended across the entire breeding ground of dust storms.

While the experts concluded their conferences with M. L. Wilson, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, on a tour of the dust area, the soil continued on the blow.

A long-time anti-dust storm program in the five-State area adopted today by the soil experts included determination of the best cropping methods and resodding of land susceptible to blowing with suitable grass crops.

Meanwhile, southeastern Colorado reported silt-laden clouds which swooped down from the northwest and came back a second time from the southeast. Dust also was reported in western Kansas.

1,200 Leave Homes.

At Colorado Springs, A. E. McClymonds, regional director of Federal soil erosion, received appeals from Utah for aid in combating the dust. From Grantsville City, Utah, came a report that 1,200 persons were abandoning their homes. However, there was rain and snow in parts of Utah and Wyoming as well.

The dust-barrier program explained to representatives of Oklahoma, Colorado, Texas, New Mexico and Kansas is built around a plan of deep listing of farm lands.

By listing millions of acres erosion experts hope to provide a temporary solution to the problem. Wilson expressed belief a permanent cure must include a vegetable covering for much of the now barren area—barren chiefly because of drought.

At Kansas City, G. E. Farrell, AAA director, said "emergency crops are the thing now, of course, in combating conditions resulting from dust storms and drought. He mentioned kafir corn, sorghum and corn.

Coordination Planned.

Coordination of the shelter-belt program with the soil erosion program was discussed with Wilson today by Paul H. Roberts, Lincoln, Nebr., director of the tree-planting plan. He said planting of trees on farms west of the shelter-belt area was a probability. Such plantings would be cared for by the farmers. This, with proper tillage methods, could minimize effects of dust storms, Roberts said.

Tantalizing showers, but no heavy rains, fell in western Kansas today as the drought and dust delayed planting of spring crops. Denver reported light rain and snow on the western slope of Colorado.

Chairmen Appeal For Jewish Relief

Hershfield and Kauffman Emphasize Needs.

Declaring that there "has never been a time since the dark Middle Ages when the lot of millions of Jews in Europe was as bitter as at this moment," Isidore Hershfield and Edmund I. Kauffman, co-chairmen of the United Jewish Appeal, made a Passover appeal yesterday for support of the Washington $35,000 relief fund.

Although actual canvass for funds will not begin until May 8, Mr. Hershfield and Mr. Kauffman issued their appeal to be read today in all synagogues at the commencement of the great Jewish religious holiday.

The appeal is being made by the United Jewish Appeal, representing the two major Jewish fund-raising organizations, the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee and the American Palestine Campaign.

Proceeds of the funds will go toward alleviating the distress of Jewish exiles from Nazi Germany and the millions of Jews on relief in various European countries.

Huge Motors Speed Clipper Ship to New Record

to receive greetings and congratulatory messages, said:

"This project means the final stretch of overseas pioneering and is a tribute to the remarkable strides made by aviation in the last three decades.

"We had no difficulty on any portion of the trip. We were able to accomplish the scientific experiments assigned to us."

Link to Islands.

Army and Navy authorities here and high Government officials in Washington hailed the flight as the forerunner of American transpacific operations and as a means of linking the United States and her Pacific islands, particularly the Hawaiians, more closely.

Musick said the clipper would make some experimental flights over the islands of Hawaii before returning to California.

Eventually, probably this summer, the service will be gradually extended westward until American planes will be spanning 8,000 miles of ocean between California and the Orient, via Honolulu, Midway Island, Wake Island, Guam and Manila. Another air line will link Manila with Canton, China.

"Bright Moonlight."

In 30 seconds she was off the water and on her way. Flying conditions were favorable and Jarboe had time to send messages about the setting sun and the bright moonlight as they sped westward.

At times the plane exceeded 160 miles an hour in speed. Once she slowed down to 105. On occasions she zig-zagged as she went, to test apparatus.

The plane hit a small rainstorm as it approached the islands. She arrived over Honolulu at 7:05 a. m. (12:35 p. m. Eastern standard time), exactly on schedule, and buzzed leisurely about until landing time.

The crew had many comforts never dreamed of by the aviators who pioneered the California-Hawaii route at a cost of ten lives and four planes. They had a variety of food, places to sleep and plenty of scientific help.

Three thousand gallons of gasoline—enough to travel 3,200 miles—was aboard. The plane has four motors, but can operate on one. Radio equipment enabled the crew to keep in constant communication with both Hawaii and the mainland.

Columbus, Ohio, April 17 (AP).—Machinery whirred again today in the convict-manned workshops of Ohio Penitentiary.

All but 78 of the 1,056 prisoners who laid down their tools Monday in a passive revolt went back to work, Warden James C. Woodard announced.

"The strike," involving nearly one-fourth of the prison population, was against what the convicts termed the State parole board's delay in granting releases.

Woodard said the 78 recalcitrant prisoners would be given short rations and placed in solitary confinement.

A. T. & T. Head Obtains Praise For Dividends

Stockholders Turn Guns on Washinton, Demanding Shift to G. O. P.

By the United Press.

New York, April 17.—Walter S. Gifford's $206,250 annual salary as president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. is entirely satisfactory to his stockholders, they indicated with applause at the annual meeting today.

"He's worth more than that," one shareholder shouted, still remembering the dividend check he received two days ago at the regular annual rate of $9 per share which has prevailed right through the depression.

Considerable time was spent eulogizing Gifford and the company's other executives. Then stockholders turned their guns on Washington and let forth criticism that ranged to a plea by an unidentified holder "to end all troubles by voting the Republican ticket."

More than 300 stockholders packed the small assembly room of the A. T. & T. Building, but they represented only a small proportion of the 675,000 registered holders living in all parts of the world. The 300, however, held or had proxies for 10,326,777 of the outstanding 18,662,275 shares and voted them unanimously to re-elect directors.

Quizzed on Salary.

Elections out of the way, William J. Carrigan, of Paul's Village, Conn., got the floor. He asked Gifford to tell his salary, remarking he hoped the figures would not be as fantastic as some brought out in recent stockholders' meetings.

"My salary is $206,250," Gifford said. "We have no bonuses, you know. We never did have any." Stockholders laughed. One of them delivered an oration of praise and Carrigan did not press his query. Talk turned to Washington.

J. Blackman, a stockholder, gave an imitation of how a politician would use the high telephone dividends as ammunition for his campaign.

"My constituents," he mimicked, "how can we permit this giant corporation to pay 9 per cent in dividends when your hard-earned money draws only 2 per cent in banks? The reason this company can pay such high dividends is its high telephone rates. The rates should be cut immediately."

Blackman thereupon urged the corporation to double the outstanding stock and thus automatically cut the dividend by half. "A 4½ per cent dividend would look better to the politician," he said, "and it might reduce pressure for reductions in telephone rates."

Gifford frowned upon such procedure. He also indicated the corporation had considered refunding its bonds at lower interest rates to insure the $9 payment, but pointed out that even if the bonds were cut to a 3½ per cent rate only 15 to 20 cents a share would be saved on the stock outstanding.

"Education" Urged.

Then a stockholder suggested a policy of education for the public and for legislators.

"Did you call them legislators?" a quiet appearing, gray-haired man in the front row asked. "They're not legislators. They are inflated balloons."

On the subject of education, Mrs. E. F. Potter of Brooklyn, middle-aged matron, trimly dressed and mighty capable looking, gave her solution:

"I can gain attention by talking over the telephone dividend with those with whom I come into contact. I told my butcher that if the rate were cut I would be forced to buy cheese instead of lamb chops. He would be against a reduction. I told my milliner that if the $9 annual rate were reduced I would be unable to buy hats from her. She, too, is on my side."

Louis M. Levy, a stockholder absent from the meeting, had a representative read a long document urging Nation-wide organization of stockholders so that they could "cooperate against confiscation."

As for stockholders organizing, one of them offered: "If the stockholders belonged to a labor union, they'd have a lobby in Washington."

During the course of the meeting Gifford told the stockholders that a pickup was noted in the telephone business. In the first two weeks of April there was a gain of 22,500 telephones, he said. He did not consider rates as too high but would welcome feasible methods of reducing them. He said the system was not under any code, but was operating under the President's re-employment agreement.

Mme. Cantacuzene-Grant Decries Mrs. Magna's 'Snub' of Candidate.

Motion Is Upheld.

The resolutions recommmended: Legislation requiring public school teachers to take the oath of allegiance to the Constitution; legislation to provide for a greater merchant marine; bills now pending before the House Immigration Committee to restrict immigration; compulsory teaching of American history, civics and government in high schools; a large Navy program; continuance of the Reserve Training Corps, and additional strength for the standing Army.

Mme. Cantacuzène-Grant later issued a statement in which Mrs. Magna was called "unethical and unchivalrous" for turning down an invitation to attend Mrs. Gillentine's reception Tuesday and then going to Mrs. Becker's and assisting her in the receiving line.

$13,000 Pledged Toward Debt.

The outstanding debt on Constitution Hall was announced by Mrs. Magna as $155,000, following which the platform was turned over to contributors, representing the nation-wide chapters. A total of $13,000 was pledged, reducing the debt to $142,000.

Mrs. Becker's address was in the nature of a report on activities of the National Defense Through Patriotic Education Committee, of which she is chairman. It urged an adequate national defense and attacked communistic and pacifistic propaganda.

Mrs. Gillentine reported on the accomplishments during the past year of her committee, which is concerned with the filing and lending of patriotic lectures and lantern slides.

Other reports were presented by Mrs. John M. Beavers, chairman of the buildings and grounds committee; Mrs. G. L. H. Brousseau, chairman of the Constitution Hall memory book committee; Mrs. Walter L. Tobey, chairman of the student loan fund committee; Mrs. William H. Pouch, who is the unopposed candidate for organizing secretary general, and Mrs. J. Warren Perkins, on the D. A. ## Ex-Governor in Court To Aid Capitol Officer

Former Gov. Charles H. Brough of Arkansas appeared in Traffic Court yesterday to intervene in behalf of Joe House Mitchell, a Capitol policeman, charged with three traffic violations.

Mitchell pleaded guilty to counts of passing a red light, speeding and failing to give notification of an address change. He was fined $5 on the red light charge after pleas for leniency by Brough. Judge John P. McMahon took his personal bond on the other two counts.

Camera Traps Byrns in D.A.R. Political 'Plot'

Some Meanie Snapped Him Greeting Mrs. Becker at Rival's Reception.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives was the innocent foil yesterday in a D. A. R. row which, before it ended (if it has ended), saw several embattled ladies of the press shooed into C street and Mrs. William A. Becker denounced as a conniving meanie.

It's all kind of difficult to explain (if it can be explained), but, anyway, let's start with the formal statement issued by a few Tennessee supporters of Mrs. Flora Myers Gillentine, who is Mrs. Becker's arch-rival for the office of president general.

"Mrs. Becker was introduced to Speaker Byrns," says the statement, "at the Tennessee dinner receiving line last night at the Mayflower Hotel for Mrs. Gillentine. A photographer was placed at an advantageous point and Mrs. Becker was introduced to Speaker Byrns.

"At that moment the photographer snapped the picture. Speaker Byrns flashed his famous smile at a pretty woman, but Speaker Byrns is a fast friend and ardent supporter of Mrs. Gillentine for president general.

"(Signed), Mrs. Ralph Jared, Cookeville, Tenn.; Janie Lowe Paschall, Cookeville, Tenn.; Jessie E. Turner, Chattanooga, Tenn. (Witnessed), Mrs. S. L. Cowles."

It seems the picture appeared in a Washington newspaper yesterday and the Tennessee protestants descended upon the Constitution Hall pressroom, one flight beneath the stage, seeking rectification, vindication, etc.

When the ten or so reporters, all but three of them women, therein assembled began extending their sympathy, the convention's press chairman flounced in with a warning against thrashing out partisan politics in a chamber dedicated solely to the dissemination of official congress news.

So the "seethers," as Mrs. Gillentine's defenders called themselves, and reporters continued their interchange in C street. The statement which was spawned there was duly signed and witnessed.

As nearly as can be determined, here is how the ruckus started:

Speaker and Mrs. Byrns were about to enter and seat themselves at the dinner, given in honor of Mrs. Gillentine, when Mrs. Becker, leaving her reception, which had just ended in a room across the corridor, encountered the Speaker and his wife. A photographer caught them together and the picture was published.

The "seethers" charged the meeting was not accidental, but "framed" for a photographer's—and Mrs. Becker's—benefit.

Mrs. Worthy Clark, 87-year-old member of Charles Taylor Chapter, Cleveland, played her part in the raising of $13,000 yesterday to help cancel the debt on Constitution Hall. She pledged $1 for each of her five great-great-grandchildren.

Eight years ago, when the drive for funds was opened, she gave $1 for each of her 60 grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The names of her seven children are in the cornerstone of Constitution Hall.

Another venerable delegate is Mrs. Eleanor Washington Howard, last member of the Washington family born at Mount Vernon. Living to the age of 79 has surprised her, she said, attributing her longevity to the "never say-die" spirit of her native Virginia.

The Constitution Hall memory book is going to be something with teeth in it, literally.

Mrs. Grace L. H. Brosseau, reporting yesterday on the work of her memory book committee, said gold fillings, "with even the teeth included sometimes," old jewelry and a man's watch are among the items which have answered the call for gold with which to cover the memory book. Mrs. Brosseau is a former president general.

D. A. R. delegates were entertained yesterday by young singers, dancers and comedians who are pupils in "approved schools" in North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Ohio and other States. One of the performers was Kate Smith, Alabama namesake of the radio songstress.

A rug, made in the Ellis Island Marine Hospital by a merchant seaman who lost both legs in an accident, was presented to Mrs. Magna yesterday. The patient called the pattern the "Tree of Life."

Mrs. Ralph Church, wife of Representative Church, of Illinois, entertained at tea yesterday in honor of her townswoman, Mrs. Julian G. Goodhue, of Evanston, who is State regent of Illinois. Members of the Illinois delegation to the congress were guests.

Mrs. James Beaver Mennell, of London, is the first State regent from England to attend any continental congress, it is understood. She is one of the original members of the Walter Hines Page Chapter, which, organized in 1925, is the only D. A. R. chapter in England.

Mrs. Mennell is the granddaughter of Thomas Allen, of Pittsfield, Mass. She is a director of the American Women Club in London, which, she says, has a growing connection with the D. A. R.

Women of the Alabama State Society entertained the Alabama delegates yesterday at a luncheon at the Cosmos Club. Mrs. Hugh Grant, wife of the president of the society, presided.

The D. A. R. delegates from Missouri were guests last night at the Shoreham Hotel of the Missouri Society of Washington. Hostesses included Mrs. John Cochran, Mrs. Clarence Cannon, Mrs. Clyde Williams, Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, Mrs. Edward Hayes, Mrs. Cleveland Newton, Mrs. Charles P. Keyser, Miss Jane Anderson, Mrs. L. H. Hannan, Mrs. Volney Burnett, Mrs. Madge J. Reese, Mrs. Thomas F. X. Callahan, Miss Louise Foster, Mrs. Samuel Majors, Mrs. Mary Wright Johnson and Mrs. Grattan Kearns.

New Deal Branded Delay to Recovery

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—Speaking under the auspices of the American Liberty League, Dr. Neil Carothers, Lehigh University professor, tonight contended that none of the New Deal legislation now pending "is likely to contribute to recovery."

In a radio address the economics teacher charged NRA, AAA and PWA with unwholesome results and with actually delaying the lifting of the depression.

"The unsound philosophy that all economic problems can be solved by government," he said, "has led to cruel deception of the people.

"Conservative economists estimate that these two years of experimentation have retarded the progress of recovery in this country from six months to one year."

Dr. Carothers, a member of the national advisory council of the Liberty League, said that with the grant of the $4,880,000,000 appropriation "the last shadow of an excuse for further experiments is gone."

Tax Receipts On Gifts Rise 800 Per Cent

$64,339,757 Collected for 1934; D. C. Area Pays $1,256,924.

Gifts by wealthy persons last year netted the Treasury $64,339,757 in March, it was revealed yesterday by Guy T. Helvering, Commissioner of Internal Revenue. This was $56,670,322 more than was received in the same month from the tax on gifts for the calendar year 1933.

This increase of almost 800 per cent in the gift tax collections for March caused widespread surprise in the Treasury. The only plausible explanation that has been advanced was to the effect that many persons contemplating giving away a part of their estates did so last year in order to escape a higher rate of taxation effective on January 1, last.

Gift tax returns are required to be filed on or before March 15, following the close of the calendar year in which the gifts are made. Thus the collections of gift taxes occur in that month.

Under the 1934 revenue act the taxes on gifts above $100,000 made in 1935 or subsequent calendar years was sharply boosted. For instance, the tax paid on a gift of $600,000 in 1934 would be $45,125, but if the same gift were made this year the tax would be $65,700. On a net gift of $1,000,000 the tax for 1934 would be $92,125, but $136,200 for 1935. On a $10,000,000 gift the tax would be $2,312,125 for 1934, and $3,312,450 for 1935.

"This prospective increase in rates may have caused some persons to make gifts in 1934, who otherwise would have waited until 1935 or after to take that action, thus accounting in part for the largest increase in gift taxes in March of this year over the amount received a year ago," Mr. Helvering asserted.

The statistics revealed by the Internal Revenue Bureau did not disclose the total of gifts on which the tax was paid or the identity of the donors.

New York City residents paid $24,668,077.89 in gift taxes. Little Delaware was second in the amount of such taxes, paying the Treasury $4,028,189; the Twenty-third Pennsylvania District was third, paying $3,755,541 and Michigan was fourth with a payment of $2,788,424.

The collection district which comprises Maryland and the District of Columbia paid $1,256,924 in gift taxes. All together 13 States or collection districts paid in excess of $1,000,000 in gift taxes during March. No receipts from gift taxes were reported by four States—Idaho, Montana, Nevada and South Dakota.

Armory Demands Arise in Virginia

State Guard Joins General Request for U. S. Funds.

By the Associated Press.

Virginia joined yesterday in a request of the National Guard Association for funds to build new armories.

Brig. Gen. S. Gardner Waller, Old Dominion adjutant general, was a member of the guard delegation which asked a joint House and Senate military committee to approve legislation authorizing $80,000,000 work relief money for armories throughout the Nation.

Waller did not address the committee, but it was understood his department has plans for building armories in 16 Virginia cities at a cost of $2,000,000.

Under the proposal outlined to the committee by Gen. Roy E. Kean, of Illinois, president of the National Guard Association, the cities would provide the sites and would provide maintenance after the buildings are constructed.

Works Funds Sought For Emmitsburg Road

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., April 17.—Improvement of that portion of Route 16 between Mercersburg, Pa., and Emmitsburg, Md., by use of a part of the public works fund will be urged upon State and Federal officials. The appeal will be carried before Warren S. Van Dyke, State secretary of highways, within a few days.

The Rotary Club indorsed the road plan yesterday. The road is improved as far as Mercersburg, but repairs are needed from Mercersburg through Greencastle and Waynesboro and as far as Emmitsburg. It is regarded as the shortest route to Washington from the western part of Pennsylvania.

Davis, Baker, Reed, Bitler Called Counsel for Jailed "Rebel."

By the Associated Press.

Five of the Nation's most prominent lawyers—some of them avowed anti-New Dealers — were disclosed yesterday to have become interested in the widely publicized case of Fred C. Perkins, York (Pa.) independent battery maker, who was convicted and spent 18 days in jail for refusing to pay the minimum wage under an NRA code.

Perkins, a huge man who said he spoke "unofficially" for many small manufacturers, and "officially" for himself, told the Senate Finance Committee, studying NRA extension legislation, that a noted group of attorneys had been prevailed upon to join George Love, his private lawyer, in appealing his conviction.

Five Named.

He named John W. Davis, Newton D. Baker, former Senators David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, and James A. Reed, of Missouri, and Harold B. Bitler, of Philadelphia, president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association, as the five.

Perkins was one of the last witnesses before the committee closes its long NRA hearings today with examination of Hugh S. Johnson, former Blue Eagle administrator.

Black tried to show the Perkins case was being widely advertised for political purposes, but the York battery man said, above the laughter, "There's nothing funny about it."

Didn't Take Stand.

Perkins said he was convicted for paying an average wage of 24.4 cents an hour when the code called for 40 cents. He said he was not allowed to take the stand in court. He repeated he did not know why, but finally recalled the "predominant" reason was that his attorney, Love, said the defense would have the final plea, and he "thought it best that I not go on."

He said the York compliance board recommended code exemption for his plant, but the proposal was turned down in Washington.

1 Miner Killed, 2 Hurt As Timbers Collapse

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Lonaconing, Md., April 17.—Joseph H. Mills, 30, Midland, was killed and Frank McGowan, Midland, and Leonard Dye, Gilmore, were injured in a Consolidation Coal Co. mine near here today, when timbers which they were setting collapsed. Mills was caught by coal and rock, while the injured men were struck by timbers. Mills is survived by the widow, Mabel Wills, his mother, Mrs. Anna Mills and four brothers and four sisters.

Hen's 'Torpedo' Eggs Held Forecast of War

By the Associated Press.

Texarkana, Tex., April 17.—Eggs shaped like torpedoes led Charles Settles, 64-year-old Bowie County farmer, to predict the World War two years before it started. Today similar eggs led him to forecast another war within two years.

"If another war doesn't break out within two years, then my hen doesn't know her business," Settles said.

Texarkana poultrymen agreed the eggs are rare.

The brown leghorn in 1912 laid eight eggs shaped like torpedoes, and four shaped like artillery projectiles. The buff minorca has laid nothing but torpedo eggs this year, Settles said.

The Milk Boy Puts on Long Pants

IT takes more than milk to make a milkman.

To serve a big city requires a processing plant, machinery for "pasteurizing," bottle washing, bottling and capping, wagons and auto trucks.

Good as the equipment may be, it wears out, gets out of date. While it is in use it has to be serviced, maintained.

Replacement costs can't be dodged.

Wages represent more than half the operating expense.

How to pay a fair wage and keep the price of milk to a level which means volume sales is a problem that goes with the milk business.

Use of route wagons and the time of drivers is economical only when the quantity of milk, cream and other dairy products distributed approaches the full "load" they could efficiently handle.

Other things being equal—the bigger the distributor in resources and facilities, the lower the unit cost of distribution—and the lower the "overhead" charge per quart. Management, inspection, supervision, accounting and the like bear less heavily per unit of product the greater the number of units sold.

Only a big company is big enough to process the milk left over . . . the milk the public does not buy in bottles. What is not needed for the "bottle trade" is used in other products.

Cream is obtained by separating the butterfat from the whole milk.

Skim milk is converted into condensed milk. It is also used to make milk powder and casein.

Condensed and evaported milk are salable by-products.

Butter manufacture has become a dairy mainstay.

These products enlarge the market for the farmer's milk.

Lyddane Case 'Victims' Voice Faith in Mates

'Slom' and Mrs. Beall Reaffirm Devotion; Hearing Two Days Off.

Two days in advance of a Police Court hearing, the two individuals who, according to police, were marked for death in Rockville's alleged murder conspiracy, are manifesting a spirit of devotion and trustfulness toward their mates.

Francis ("Slom") Lyddane, whose wife, blonde Anne Lyddane, is charged with conspiring to murder him and Mrs. Josephine Beall, has expressed confidence in her innocence from the outset.

Yesterday Mrs. Beall told reporters:

"I am absolutely sure my husband knew nothing of any plot on my life, and I have no intention of seeking a divorce. We are on the best of terms."

Withdrew Divorce Suit.

In December, 1933, Mrs. Beall filed suit for a divorce from Arthur Beall, naming Mrs. Lyddane as co-respondent. Two days later, however, she withdrew the suit.

Mrs. Lyddane and the three men who, according to the police, were hired to kill Mr. Lyddane and Mrs. Beall, will be given a preliminary hearing in the Rockville Police Court at 10 a. m. Saturday.

Mrs. Beall said the first information she had received of the alleged murder plot came from her husband. This was after he had been questioned by Rockville police and been released.

She said that while she would be glad to aid the State in its prosecution of the case, she had no information she believed would be valuable.

Mrs. Lyddane, who is Rockville agent for the Fidelity and Deposit Co. of Maryland, issued a statement yesterday denying that any of the bonds she had written for public employes were missing.

H. L. Jenness, assistant manager of the bonding company, corroborated her statement, saying:

Children Visit Mount Vernon On Tour Today

Tomb of Unknown Soldier of Revolution Also to Be Viewed.

A pilgrimage to Mount Vernon and to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier of the Revolution is an important item on the program today for Children of the American Revolution, in convention at the Red Cross Building.

Yesterday Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt received the 400 delegates at the White House. She accepted the gift of an American flag from George Washington Parke Custis Chapter, C. A. R., of Buffalo, N. Y.

A feature of sessions yesterday was presentation of a pageant, "Forerunners of Old Glory," by members of the Peace Pipe Chapter under direction of Mrs. Arthur D. Wall, chairman of the D. A. R. committee on correct use of the flag. Mrs. Wall, who wrote the pageant, was aided by Mrs. George E. Rice.

Twelve-year-old Katherine Buckingham, of the Moore House Society of Virginia, led convention members in the pledge of allegiance to the flag, part of the daily ceremony opening meetings.

The session yesterday morning was devoted to presentation of special reports. Among those who reported were Mrs. John M. Mosher, Mrs. Thaddeus M. Jones, national treasurer; Miss Aimee E. Powell, Mrs. Josiah A. Van Orsdel, Mrs. Frank S. Ray, Mrs. John Morrison Kerr and Mrs. Amos A. Fries.

According to plans the Children will leave Memorial Continental Hall at 1:30 p. m. today on the journey to Alexandria and Mount Vernon. Their first stop will be in the churchyard of Old Presbyterian Church Meeting House where the Unknown Soldier of the Revolution is buried.

Play Ball!

They say that horse-racing threatens to dethrone many another sport in America—not because of the horses, or even the men on the horses, but because of the money on the horses. It is true, too, that golf, once "the game of kings," and later of presidents, has become a popular proletarian pastime. Tennis, once considered merely ladylike, draws thousands of vigorous contestants to the courts. Will baseball suffer from such oncoming competition?

The professional season which finally got under way yesterday at Griffith Stadium brings no hint of declining prestige. It indicates that the mass of Americans are still among the fans. The juvenile season which opened still earlier on many a vacant lot demonstrates that the appetite for baseball has not been strangled by the many new interests which confront the rising generation.

It is all very well for the British to say that the game originated in English "rounders." America knows that it started in American "Old Four Cat," and that, almost a century ago, the diamond was designed by Col. Abner Doubleday, of the United States Army. Baseball was played from Maine to Oregon in the era of the Civil War. Perhaps its relative backwardness in the South had something to do with the outcome of that struggle! Away back in 1867 the first trans-Allegheny game-tour was undertaken. It was led by a United States Senator-to-be from Maryland, Arthur Pue Gorman, at the head of the Washington Nationals.

From that day to this, baseball has retained its place, among games, as "first in the hearts of its countrymen." America is big enough, the year is long enough, for every other healthy activity besides. But baseball still remains the national sport. Particularly since Washington won yesterday!

A Judicious Move.

From the beginning of the controversy over the bill to extend the authority of the local government the Commissioners have insisted that their interest runs only to the improvement of municipal administration. The sincerity of that claim has now been emphasized by the elimination of all controversial features from this measure in the hope that it may be passed without difficulty in the present session of Congress.

Valid objections were raised against those sections of the bill placing the schools, the Public Library and similar independent agencies under the jurisdiction of the Board of Commissioners. The educational system must be insured against the slightest danger of having its policies upset every time a new group of executives for Washington is selected. Since this was not the purpose of the bill, the Commissioners have wisely stricken out the proposal, along with various other controversial items.

Thus stripped to bare essentials of municipal government, the bill merits early attention in Congress. An important step forward will be taken if local authorities are merely permitted to open graves, adjust quarantine regulations, control traffic, etc., without special acts of Congress. Certainly Congress should be as eager to be relieved of this petty routine as the people of Washington are eager for a municipal government that will be immediately responsive to community needs as they arise.

On Schedule.

For several years, on scheduled days and at the appointed time, five nattily uniformed men have walked briskly from the Pan-American Airways offices at Miami, boarded their passenger-carrying mail plane out in the bay and after a few whirrs of the motors have taken off for Colon, Panama. The return trips have been made with the same dispatch and precision.

Similarly, a Pan-American crew took off from Alameda, Calif., Tuesday night and yesterday, less than 18 hours later, their giant aerial clipper landed at Honolulu. No trumpets or fanfares of advance publicity attended the flight. With these same blue-uniformed men it was all in a day's work. Yes, this may prove the forerunner of a regular passenger and mail air-service between California and China.

Thus the flights of those gallants who blazed the transpacific trail, some of whom lost their lives in the pioneering, are being put to practical purpose. Time marches on. Man's enterprise keeps abreast. And only Washington seems unable to realize the implications of this progress for cities with unsafe and inadequate airports.

Bankrupt.

In a sanctimonious resolution, which carries little hope for any fundamental improvement in the European situation, the Council of the League of Nations has formally rebuked Germany for her recent denunciation of the disarmament sections of the Treaty of Versailles.

The wording of the resolution, which declares that "Germany has failed in the duty which lies upon all members of the international community to respect undertakings which they have contracted," will make it virtually impossible for the German government to resume its membership in the League. But the action taken at Geneva yesterday does more than block that desirable step. It also calls for the development of a policy of economic and financial sanctions "which might be applied should, in the future, a state, whether a member of the League of Nations or not, endanger peace by unilateral repudiation of its international obligations."

This, in effect, means the development of a definite anti-German alliance under the leadership of the victors in the last war. It is a tragic confirmation of the criticism of those who have maintained that the chief function of the League has always been to enforce the terms of the Versailles Treaty. It is a step toward surrounding Germany with a ring of steel which may, because of German economic weakness, for the present preserve an uneasy absence of actual hostilities. But it is the direct opposite of that policy of constructive statesmanship which would have sought to build real peace on a freely admitted equality of national rights.

Of course, the brutal, headstrong character of the Nazi government has invited this resolution at Geneva. But few of the nations which have so piously condemned the German action of March 16 are in a position to throw stones effectively. Six countries which have defaulted on their war-debt agreements with the United States solemnly approved the resolution's statement that "it is an essential principle of the law of nations that no power can liberate itself from the engagements of a treaty nor modify the stipulations thereof unless with the consent of the other contracting parties."

One of the Council members denouncing Germany in this lofty language was Russia, which has always maintained that obligations of the Czarist regime are not binding on its present government. Another condemnatory vote came from Poland, which less than a year ago unilaterally repudiated her obligations to the League in respect to minorities in her territory. Yet another rebuke to Germany came from Turkey, which shortly after the war pointed the way to Germany by forceful overthrow of the Treaty of Sevres. Italy, so scrupulous with respect to the treaty rights of Abyssinia—a fellow member of the League—is also prominent in the parade of the Geneva Pharisees. In fact, only Denmark, with a clean record on treaty observances, dissociated herself from the denunciation of the German kettle by other European pots.

The refusal of the victorious powers to regard Germany as an equal was primarily responsible for driving that country into the hands of the fanatics who now control her destiny. Confronted with a situation for which they must share the responsibility before history, the only concession of the war victors is to gild their mailed fist with a veneer of self-conscious rectitude. Nor is it to be overlooked that this portentous resolution makes no distinction between the violation of negotiated and dictated treaties.

The bankruptcy of European statesmanship was never more apparent than in the approval given this sorry declaration by the Council of the League of Nations.

Local Fire Traps.

Washington's housing problem is not confined to slum clearance and high rents. Residents learned, as the result of a tragedy last week, that the city contains many potential fire traps against which the law offers virtually no protection. The urgent need for effort to eliminate this condition was poignantly illustrated by the fire in the 700 block of Columbia road, which cost the lives of five children and two adults.

Fourteen people were sleeping in a six-room, three-story house when the tragedy occurred. Eight of them were on the third floor. Regulations against overcrowding were apparently inapplicable in this case, because all of the individuals thus huddled together were members of the same "family," which is to say they were all close relatives. Overcrowding is forbidden only in tenements and lodging houses. Under present congested conditions, more extensive regulations covering "private" dwellings are obviously needed.

Lodging houses and tenements must have at least two exits to save the occupants from being trapped by fire. But if the building is a private residence occupied by only one family, the building inspector lacks jurisdiction to enforce this regulation. The fatal blaze of last week has called attention to deficiencies in the present regulations which leave authorities without means of preventing a recurrence of this tragedy. Only a thorough overhauling of the District's housing law can be expected to effect the necessary safeguards.

Fortunately that task has already been undertaken by the Washington Committee on Housing. This group has selected one of its members, Dr. Laurence F. Schmeckebier, to head a sub-committee with the enactment of a new District housing code for its objective. Dr. Schmeckebier is conferring with local officials as a first step toward compiling a code that will eliminate unhealthful housing conditions and mitigate fire hazards. His extensive knowledge of the District government and its problems gives assurance that a thoughtful and constructive report will be rendered. It will then be incumbent upon the Commissioners to press for whatever remedial action is needed.

Flexible Retirement.

Aside from extension of the merit system, the enactment of a flexible retirement law is perhaps the most important personnel issue before Congress this session. In a broad sense, moreover, this problem can not be disconnected from the merit system, for the basic purpose in making retirement laws less rigid is to permit incapacitated employes to step aside, while others less vulnerable to age continue in the service.

The desirability of modifying the present arbitrary system is not open to question. Human beings can not be measured by a single standard, even if allowance is made for the different types of work they perform. Some are unable to render useful service after 50 or 55 years of age. Others may be doing their best work at 60 or even 70. When retirement at a given age is made compulsory for any large group the Government is certain to lose both through the inefficiency of some who cling to their jobs to obtain retirement benefits, and from the ousting of others still in their prime.

The task of working out a satisfactory flexible system, however, is not a simple one. Certain groups favor optional retirement at the end of 30 years' service. For some employes entering the service at 20 to 25 years of age that might mean retirement far too early. Moreover, this plan would not provide for that large number who become Government employes too late in life to serve for 30 years.

The Civil Service Commission often has suggested optional retirement at 60 years of age. For the great majority of employes that would afford a ten-year margin between optional and compulsory retirement, thus placing superannuation on a more logical basis. Dr. Leonard D. White, of the Civil Service Commission, suggests, however, in his current book, "Government Career Service," that the retirement option should work two ways. He points out the obvious desirability of permitting the Government to "protect itself against the danger of senility in these big positions."

Under present conditions there is danger that such an option, granted executive officers, might be used to oust employes for political reasons. Whichever way Congress turns to solve the problem, however, it will run point-blank against the urgent necessity of strengthening the merit system. If revision of the retirement law is undertaken for the sole purpose of improving the service and relieving incapable employes, no insuperable obstacles will be encountered.

Stupid Propaganda.

The State Department has addressed a very solemn and decidedly humorless admonition to the "potato growers of Maine and others who have written to the President in regard to the possibility of reductions in duties in connection with the proposed trade agreement with Canada." Instead of betraying considerable vexation with the unnamed "propagandists of high protection" who are believed to have inspired the letters in question, the State Department might have more effectively indulged in a satiric chuckle over their incredibly bungling methods.

When letters come from New England school children—protesting that "the economic destruction of Aroostook County" would follow a reduction of duties on Canadian potatoes, it is easy to detect the hand of the publicity agent behind the juvenile Yankee mind. If this is the best that high-pressure lobbying methods can achieve to arouse public sentiment against a reduction in potato duties not yet decided upon, the Administration ought to be delighted rather than solemnly annoyed.

The lobbyists to be feared are not those who supply school children with stereotyped letters of protest. They can be disposed of easily and directly through the medium of an official communique such as that just released by the State Department. It is the lobbyists who work in silence and secrecy, leaving little or no trace of their handiwork, who are truly dangerous.

Lobbyists of all sorts deserve biting denunciation when they disseminate false information or misrepresent their position as spokesmen for dissatisfied groups. If they merely seek to voice the honest views of those whom they represent, however, there can be no proper objection offered to their activities; the less so since the Administration has invited free expressions of opinion from all producing groups affected or likely to be affected by proposed changes in tariff duties under trade agreements.

Mr. Creel's Conversion.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: George Creel, in a recent article in Collier's, informs us that Rexford Guy Tugwell no longer dashes down from Sinai each morning. Now what was the professor doing up there? Not looking for Noah's ark?

While Brother Tugwell is experimenting, we provincial ones are having a little splash, splash and gurgle over Mr. Creel's astigmatism which causes him to mistake the still hale and hearty right for a "small bunch of immortelles." The old order he sees as a dreary void with everybody determined to keep a good safe distance from it. He forgets, apparently, that the trail Mr. Roosevelt has tried to pursue with less deviation than any other is the trail that leads back to the price structure of the Coolidge era; that the crop control trail leads back to 1639, and that the subsistence homesteads and transplanting of people leads back to the same early period.

Perhaps we provincial ones are just the "ivy-covered reactionaries" that Mr. Creel pictures us. But since the ivy is not yet up to our necks, we look through old archives and—splash, splash and gurgle—we read in World's Work for March, 1930, this jeremiad by one George Creel:

> The question most properly to be discussed these days is not whether the Democratic Party can live, but whether it deserves to live. Why talk about tonics, heart stimulants and pulmotors until the wisdom of resorting to the lethal chamber has been decided?

Five years ago Mr. Creel flayed the Democratic Party because "at every point the Democratic organization stands convicted of departure from traditional principles, of an abandonment of the ancient faith." Now, anybody who casts a wistful eye in the direction of the ancient faith is accused of being too considerate of junk, of "filling the living room with rubbish that ought to be in the attic."

ELIZABETH EMMETT.
Peace Dale, R. I., April 8.

A Midshipman's View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For the past few days your columns have been filled with articles concerning this stupid Nation-wide strike of college students against war. Not once during this time have you mentioned in your editorials the men of exactly the same age as the strikers who would be the first to go to the war zone in case of a conflict.

Needless to say, I refer to the cadets at West Point and the midshipmen at Annapolis. If it were not for reading the papers we would not so much as know of the humorous conduct of the students of "higher learning."

It's not that we are interested in seeing our names in the papers, but the fact that I, for one, would like for these strikers to know that there are 1,800 students in the United States Naval Academy who are not afraid to risk their lives for their country.

A MIDSHIPMAN.
Annapolis, Md., April 5.

Japanese Competition.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our Government has passed laws on child labor and lays great stress on same. And yet our stores have piles of cotton goods and rag rugs, hooked rugs and cotton rugs made from Oriental designs. All these goods are made by child labor in Japan and if anyone will take the trouble to investigate, I dare say there is at last $2,000 worth of Japanese goods in nearly every store that sells cotton goods.

This is an injustice to our people who have to earn their living working in cotton mills. Can't we do something about it before it is too late? B. R. BOWEN.
Jacksonville, Fla., April 12.

Youth And War.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since war is so much in the air today, may I make a few observations on this vitally important subject? War is the legal acceptance of the use of force to settle disputes among nations. Force is outlawed between citizens of a state, but is permitted by tradition and international custom between the several states of the world.

Young people are the greatest sufferers from war. Biologically, they are the flower and the pick of the Nation and are forced through psychological untruth and glamour to deny the most positive instinct of nature, self-preservation, in themselves and others. The present youth movements against war are encouraging; in time they might become a deciding factor between war abroad or peace at home, between isolated nationalism and cooperative internationalism.

I favor an amendment to the Constitution that would prohibit Congress from declaring war to be fought outside the Continental United States and that would in any event take from Congress the power to conscript civilians into military service. In event of an invasion of the United States, Americans would rise to stop it just as a man would in face of a robber or murderer in his home. In case the first part of this proposed amendment is not passed, then I favor a substitute that makes mandatory "self-drafting" in order to supply military forces. By "self-drafting" I mean the equivalent of voluntary service, but with the difference that through official national machinery every man and woman of a certain age be compelled to register his will (choice) as to whether or not he will fight in the war that Congress has declared. The result is that only those who want to fight will be allowed to fight, for those who registered against participation, whatever their grounds, can not be forced into the service of fighting.

I admit that these suggestions are not perfect or sufficiently known at present, but I believe that they have merit in them, particularly to the youth of America and the world.

AMBROSE JULIAN FAHY.
Washington, April 2.

To Pay For The TVA.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On April 4, Senator L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa, spoke on "National Socialization" at Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets. Preceding his address, a film on the Tennessee Valley Authority was shown. The Senator agreed that the pictures were beautiful and that the project was fine, but he was much worried over the "practical" side—where the money was to come from to pay for these gigantic improvements.

I wondered, too; then I remembered that improvement of a community is always reflected in the rent one has to pay for room, house or apartment. All these mighty improvements, many opportunities for employment, and steadily increasing population—these will all be reflected in the increasing value of the land. Why can not the Government collect this land value—this ground rent created solely by the presence of the people—to pay for the project? M. H.
Washington, April 5.

A Swing At The New Deal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your country readers who were both astounded and indignant over Secretary Wallace's reply at his recent conference with some Western farmers were pleased to have The Post take up, editorially, this remarkable reply, and also were delighted when the entertaining Bargeron used it for a text.

Secretary Wallace's abrupt dismissal of the farmers was arrogant, impudent and particularly ill-timed, rivaling in a way the perennial administrative smile of tolerance and dismissal.

Referring now to Mgr. John A. Ryan's pronouncement that popularity of the entire Administration and of Mr. Roosevelt is surely waning, we agree with Mgr. Ryan's five reasons, stressing the second, the failure of the NRA. Truly, the NRA is the bete noir, the terror of all small business men and women. It is the growing abomination of the country.

We agree with "Administration defenders" that President Roosevelt is "sincerely trying," but can not understand how any hallucination could convey the impression that the NRA or any of the schemes of experimentation are bringing us out of the mire. The processing tax paralyzes the stock business and it is but reiteration to comment or elaborate on "restriction of crops."

President Harriman, of the United States Chamber of Commerce, says "Faith in the New Deal is waning." "One-sixth of our population is on the dole." Should this be so after two years of almost absolute power?

The consensus of opinion that we are in a depressing mess, and if we get out it will be only by a change to sane business methods and in spite of experimentation. E. T. S.
Mechanicsburg, Pa., April 9.

"Congressional Pull."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This is another sock on the jaw for the New Deal. While different politicians are flaying the tactics of the executives of the Roosevelt Administration, why not look into the office affairs of the smaller heads?

There are thousands and thousands of temporary workers in the District today, supposedly employed on Government programs, but in reality they are taking up space. There seems to be nothing for them to do in the way of work.

If there is no work why not dismiss the employe and donate the money to someone who needs it, because 90 per cent of the people who go to make up the personnel of these offices secured their positions through congressional influence and not honest endeavor. And 90 per cent of those working in the offices today could really do without a position better than the millions of jobless who don't have congressional pull. H. D. HARPER, Jr.
Washington, April 3.

Another View On Mexico.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The attempt to coerce our Government in the matter of interference in the internal affairs of Mexico comes with poor grace in view of the fact that Catholics number but one-sixth of our population. Not only is this course of action insulting to Mexicans who are loyal to their government, but it is equally offensive to the great American public, numbering, vast millions, who do not owe allegiance to the papacy.

Both the Administration and Congress are acting wisely in refraining from meddling in the affairs of our sister republic. This is in accordance with the wishes of an overwhelming majority of the American people. "DECENCY."
Washington, April 3.

The Post Impressionist

The World and the Woman

Post Office, Thursday.

WE DOUBT if ever there was an uneaten meal more thoroughly "marked, learned and inwardly digested" than that von Neurath luncheon for Sir John Simon: the one that Herr Hitler wouldn't let Sir John attend.

It provided Mr. Frederick Birchall with data for a news-cable from Berlin, as you may remember. As you cannot have forgotten, it provided us with sympathy for the disappointed hostess. It provided Mr. Joseph Danziger with a chance to chant the virtues of German viands.

Well, now it provides Mrs. Lelia Kestler, the Column's champion of Feminism, with an opportunity to defend her sex.

Which she takes—and how!

Not in the days of Miss Rebecca West's most ardent feminism were Dora Marsden and Rebecca West more ardent.

* * *

We wondered if Mrs. Kestler wouldn't accept that opportunity. We confess to thinking, when we pitied the Baronin, that we might move Mrs. Kestler. In fact, we deliberately fished in those waters.

So now we respectfully display the catch.

Mrs. Kestler heads her letter: "Hash Is Served—Left-Over from the Von Neurath Luncheon."

And she says:

"Now that the menu has been settled in more senses than one, now that the dishes are washed, now that the dogs are growling over the bones (of war), now that a good time has been had by all, may not the rest of us have a little food—for thought?

"Of course, The Post-Impressionist and Mr. Danziger may feel that everything pertaining to this luncheon has been sufficiently discussed. Of course, it may well be that you two are contentedly smoking your cigars and blowing rings with the smoke: triumphant males.

"However, I didn't hear the door bang—and the last word obviates complete frustration.

"For you remarked in closing, sir:

"Regarding that world from my watery home, with my fishy eye, I nibble at the bait.

"'A man-bossed world?' Yes, in most countries, women are merely tolerated as a biological necessity. In America and a few other lands, they have partly established the fact that they are people with a right to decide their own fate. Yet who among men has ever troubled his head profoundly about the sacrifices made by women?

"Yes, a 'man-bossed world'—in such sense. But all that men know about women is not much.

"To women," says Mrs. Kestler, "all things of which men have made the world are less important than the humble comforts . . . Men have sung their own praises over such a long period that now almost any one man's thoughts are empty echoes of the collective thinking of the 'male-controlled' society in which he lives.

"But there is another angle. Man assumes that the special privileges he enjoys are God-given, when, as a matter of fact, his bullying male technique is based on fallacy. He has paid a colossal price for his masculinized civilization. The things men know are not so important as the things they forget. While man thinks the joke is on woman, I suggest it is on him.

"His adaptations to life are not in the realm of feeling. He strives to make a perfect machine of himself, and succeeds quite well—with the result that there is a total lack of understanding between the sexes.

"Nevertheless, however loud man may shout and however firmly implanted may be his idea that he is the most important of human beings—when he has said his all—only half of the story has been told.

"So long as, in his Machine Age, man exalts power as an end in itself and busies himself with such abstract problems, woman must, on her side, advance intellectually in order that her voice may not be drowned out amid the shrilling of the machine—must go on trying against whatever difficulties to humanize human beings."

Therefore, argues Mrs. Kestler, that Berlin luncheon was far from having been cooked in vain, even if it wasn't consumed. "Though canceled," says she, "it was, indeed, a success, and the Baronin von Neurath was a charming hostess."

* * *

Because, concludes Mrs. Kestler, "woman is still engaged in a painfully unequal contest with her life-long enemies—Nature and Man." And this lunch was, apparently, one brave blow in that big battle.

But—"unequal?" Isn't that an unfortunate word for a feminist?

It reminds us of Carlyle's comment when somebody told him that Margaret Fuller was at last "willing to accept the universe."

No Competition Seen In Trade With Japan

Export And Import Records Indicate Complimentary Exchanges Between Nations.

By K. K. Kawakami.

THE other day President Roosevelt told the governors of cotton-manufacturing New England States that even if the imports of Japanese cotton textiles kept on increasing at the rate of the last few months the total estimated figure for 1935 would be but seven-tenths of 1 per cent of the total American production of cottons for 1933.

The relative importance of Japanese cotton textiles as a factor in American-Japanese commerce must be judged in the light of total Japanese exports to the United States and of total American exports to Japan. Before 1932, Japan sold more to America than she bought from her. This was largely due to the large quantity of raw silk purchased by this country. But since 1932, a radical shrinkage in American consumption of raw silk has upset the trade balance against Japan. In that year Japanese exports to America amounted to 445,147,000 yen, as against Japanese imports from America totaling 509,873,000 yen—a 94,626,000 yen excess of imports over exports. In 1933 Japan sold to America 492,237,000 yen worth of goods while she bought 620,778,000 yen worth of American goods—a 128,541,000 yen excess of imports over exports. Complete figures for 1934 are not as yet available, but it is generally known that the trade balance for the year was no more favorable for Japan than that of 1933.

An analysis of the above figures for 1933 reveals the insignificance of Japanese cottons as a factor in Japan's export trade to the United States. By far the most important Japanese export to America is raw silk, which constituted, in 1933, more than 72 per cent of the entire Japanese exports to this country. The balance of less than 28 per cent consists of numerous items of which cotton textiles amounted to only 0.26 per cent.

• • • •

THERE were, in 1933, only a few items of Japanese exports to America, which exceeded 5,000,000 yen in value. These are shown in the following table:

| | Items | Per cent of total |
|---|---|---|
| Silk | 355,805,000 | 72.28 |
| Canned foods | 26,781,000 | 5.44 |
| Porcelain | 10,180,000 | 2.07 |
| Toys | 9,975,000 | 1.82 |
| Silk and rayon textiles | 6,136,000 | 1.25 |
| Vegetable oil | 5,804,000 | 1.18 |
| Insect powder | 5,499,000 | 1.12 |

The export of cotton textiles to America, in 1933, amounted to only 1,298,000 yen, or 0.26 per cent of the total Japanese exports to this country. Exports of rubber goods and pencils, about which much ado was made here, did not amount to even a million yen.

The above table includes 5,499,000 yen worth of insect powder. Americans no doubt wonder why this country imports so much of this article from Japan. Behind this trade is a romance. Some 40 years ago a Californian went to Japan to obtain mandarin-orange trees. A Japanese orchardist, a Mr. Koyama, gave him a number of trees which, when transplanted in California, throve well and bore fruit of good quality. The American, as a token of gratitude, sent to Koyama a plant which originally came from Serbia where it had been used to make insect powder. He explained that the American soil was not suited to the growth of the plant, but that it might do well in Japan.

And the plant did thrive wonderfully in Japan. Koyama manufactured insect powder from it and exported it to China, Manchuria, Russia and other countries. The industry became far more important when American farmers in certain Middle Western States found the powder valuable as a destroyer of farm insects. Airplanes are now used to spread the powder over vast fields.

• • • •

NOW let us turn to American exports to Japan. In 1933 Japan bought 381,655,000 yen worth of American cotton, representing 61.48 per cent of the total American exports to Japan. Put this figure beside 1,298,000 yen, representing manufactured Japanese cottons imported to America, and the insignificance of the latter is brought home all the more forcibly to you. According to an economist of the New York Cotton Exchange, a million Americans are employed in producing and handling the volume of raw cotton exported to Japan. The following table shows the major items of American exports to Japan for 1933.

| | Items | % of total |
|---|---|---|
| Cotton | 381,655,000 | 61.48 |
| Steel | 27,692,000 | 4.46 |
| Lumber | 23,744,000 | 3.82 |
| Machinery | 22,246,000 | 3.58 |
| Mineral oil | 14,572,000 | 2.35 |
| Automobiles and parts | 13,288,000 | 2.14 |
| Paper pulp | 7,801,000 | 1.26 |
| Copper | 7,476,000 | 1.20 |

The two tables given above show the complementary and not competitive trend of American-Japanese trade. As Dr. Harold Moulton says, "the striking fact in the commercial relations between Japan and the North American countries (Canada and the United States) is complementary, rather than competitive character of the greater part of the trade. Indeed, between well developed trading areas we find few cases in which the advantages of commercial intercourse are so fully reciprocal in character."

And yet Canada, under the Ottawa agreement, has raised a tariff barrier against Japan. The United States has followed suit by imposing extra duties upon pencils, rubbers, and porcelain and earthenware.

• • • •

THE Japanese, anxious to avoid commercial complications with America and other countries, have organized trade associations for the purpose of regulating prices and qualities of goods for export. Associations of this nature for tangerines, matches, silk, rugs, pencils, porcelain, and earthenware have been organized especially with a view to maintaining American trade.

A word about American trade with Manchoukuo. The American public is kept ignorant of the highly advantageous nature of this trade, because the American Department of Commerce, presumably in deference to the policy of the State Department deliberately withholds publication of the figures of this trade. On the contrary, the figures of Manchoukuo-American trade is included in the general figures for Chinese-American trade, without specifying Manchoukuo, in conformity to the State Department's assumption that Manchoukuo is still part of China.

In 1931, under the old Chinese regime, American exports to Manchuria totaled 17,000,000 yen. In 1933, under the new Manchoukuo regime, American exports increased to 29 million yen as compared with only 5,000,000 yen representing the value of American imports from Manchoukuo. In 1934 almost the same volume of American trade with Manchoukuo was maintained. It is a one-sided trade, in favor of the United States.

Martinsburg Strike's End Noted in Order

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., April 17.—What is expected to prove the final episode in the Berkeley Woolen Mills Co.'s strike of last fall in this city, during which there were clashes between police and strikers followed by a number of arrests, was contained in a brief order entered today in the records of the office of Circuit Clerk William C. Morton.

The order, handed down by Judge D. H. Rodgers, states that the mill owners and strikers apparently had settled their controversy and the case was retired. The order also stated there would be no liability on the part of the plaintiff corporation on a bond of $1,000 given when an injunction was secured against the strikers.

The Third Economy And Benny.

BENNY SMITH is not a talkative person, but my distinct impression is that no one more enthusiastically embraced the ideals of the Third Economy, no one felt more bitter toward the injustices of the Old Order—the financial racketeers who carried us to the brink of disaster—no one wanted to kick the money changers out of the temple more than he. Because Benny was most generous in his support of Mr. Roosevelt. I believe he is listed as having contributed $10,000 to the campaign, but when Benny was most generous was in the preconvention days, when Mr. Roosevelt needed generosity.

BARGERON.

It was not that the Old Order bamfed Benny, or that he suffered at the hands of the wicked financial racketeers and money changers. Because in the Street Benny was looked upon as about as good a trader as any of them. So it must have been that he was wholly impersonal when he embraced the Third Economy—not that he wasn't getting along in the other economy very well, indeed.

Some of Mr. Hoover's senatorial friends once thought Benny was selling the country short and after considerable trouble they got him before a committee. His subsequent embracing of the Third Economy would prove, however, that he wasn't doing anything of the kind, that he wanted to save the country instead.

• • • •

In the early days of the third economy, when distressed bankers were trying to get to the Treasury Secretary a card or telephone call Benny would invariably turn the trick because he was a FRBC man and stood in very good with the crowd. Benny had previously visited at Warm Springs when Mr. Roosevelt was there and dazzled the patients by tossing around $1,000 bills.

One of the first things he did under the third economy, it seems, was to buy the controlling interest in the New York Shipbuilding Corporation. Then it developed that the third economy in fighting the depression on a broad front, and just as a war would be fought, had to have an enlarged Navy. The enlarged Navy was strictly for the purpose of fighting the depression and not to attack any foreign nation because it was paid for with depression-fighting funds. That is to say, about $300,000,000 came out of PWA. Those who do not understand why it was necessary to have an enlarged Navy with which to fight the depression are simply ignorant of psychology. To give a martial aspect to the fight on the depression the leaders had found it necessary to say it was to be fought just like a war. And what would make it look like a war more than to have an enlarged Navy?

Running along with the enlarged Navy development of the third economy was the NRA, which made it possible for the shipbuilders all to submit identical bids and to divide the $300,000,000 just about equally among them, or at least satisfactorily among them. Benny, now in the shipbuilding business, got his share.

The Nye committee couldn't understand why Benny had the foresight to purchase the shipbuilding corporation just at the time he did. It was suggested he must have had some advance knowledge of the $300,000,000 pie. But Benny said no, he knew nothing more than what he read in the newspapers. The question naturally arises as to why the former owners with this similar knowledge wanted to sell and whether they, having this knowledge, must not have exacted a pretty price from Benny for the property. If this is true, the value of the property was increased, which was certainly reflected in the bids which the Navy Department subsequently received. It hasn't been suggested by anyone else and Benny doesn't claim he purchased the business with a view to making cheaper warships for Uncle Sam. Indeed, the committee has evidence that the bids by the shipbuilding group for the $300,000,000 were much higher than bids in previous years.

As I say, Benny is not a talkative man. He is what is called a doer. And he is not given to poetry like Prof. Tugwell. So if you were to ask him if the "Third Economy" is the right name for this thing he has embraced he would probably say he didn't know, but that it is an economy to his liking.

"The Empire of the Snakes"—Incredible But True Stories of Poison Serpents in Africa.

By Theodore Hall.

EVER since I used to pad barefoot through the woods out by Cabin John, Md., and run down copperheads with a pronged stick, I've had a fondness for snakes. To be sure, it's lapsed of late years. I haven't picked up a copperhead by the nape of the neck or let a 4-foot black snake crawl around my shoulders in some time. And maybe—I'd better admit it—I wouldn't want to now. But I still like to read about snakes.

So this is fair warning, to any of you who just don't care for snakes, that I'm going to turn something pretty close to somersaults over the most enthralling book I've ever seen on the subject—"The Empire of the Snakes" (Stokes, $2.50), by F. G. Carnochan and H. C. Adamson.

• • • •

TRANSPORT yourselves to Tanganyika Territory, East Africa. Mr. Carnochan is on safari near Shinyanga, collecting snakes. Going along with his man, Nyoka, he suddenly caught sight of a 6-foot mamba. Now a mamba, slim and innocuous looking, is one of the most poisonous reptiles in the world. There are no serums known to science which will counteract its bite. "When anyone is bitten by one of these serpents," the author says, "he just makes his peace with God and sits down to die!"

Well, the mamba streaked for a hole in the ground, and Nyoka dived after it like a base-runner sliding home, plunged his arm down and yanked the mamba out. It was Nyoka's custom to swing a snake around in a circle and slam it on the ground; "it makes them go to sleep," said Nyoka. But this time he was too slow, or the snake too quick. The mamba corkscrewed, struck downward, and buried its teeth in Nyoka's calf.

Mr. Carnochan's heart stopped. Hopeless though it was, he had to make an effort. All he could do was to slash the wound, suck out the poison. Unpleasant, but Nyoka was his friend.

He dashed forward, knife in hand. But Nyoka had bent down calmly, seized the snake's neck, and deliberately pulled its teeth out of his leg. Then he straightened up and caught sight of Mr. Carnochan's horror-stricken face—and broke into uproarious laughter.

"Forgive me, B'wana!" he said, serious at once. "I meant no offense, but it was so funny! You see, B'wana, no snake, not even the koboko, can hurt me . . . But with the sting of the serpent came the proof of B'wana's friendship, and I will always remember that B'wana wanted to save my life." He held out his hand with ceremony, and when Mr. Carnochan reached his out he grabbed it quickly by the thumb and then shook it—a peculiar but significant gesture of alliance and respect.

"Why is it you are not dead?" cried Mr. Carnochan, when his breath came back. For Nyoka only walked a bit stiffly with a leg slightly swollen, and there was no inflammation.

"Our medicines are strong, B'wana."

• • • •

A TALL story, you will say, from some Baron Munchausen out of Africa. Well, Mr. Adamson, who helped in the writing of the book, is assistant to the president of the American Museum of Natural History. And Mr. Carnochan was second in command, next to Dr. William M. Mann of our own Zoo here, of the Smithsonian-Chrysler Expedition which went to collect animals and snakes you can see out at Rock Creek any day. And the herbs and drugs of Nyoka's medicines are being investigated at Harvard University and big hospitals in New York.

I have to pile on these details because the sheer amazement of Mr. Carnochan's book needs a catalyst of familiarity to make it real to us.

For Mr. Carnochan was the first white man, so far as he knows, to explore a vast secret society of East Africa—the Empire of the Snakes. With Noyka's friendship, he became a member, rose through all the degrees until he stood next to the old patriarch, the Snake-Emperor himself. More to the point, he discovered things, which only the most highflown fiction writers dream about, to be actual, demonstrable and repeatable facts.

• • • •

THE Snake-Men, a beneficent organization, have completely efficacious serums for every snake bite. They have drugs which, if you bathe in them, freshen your tired feeling better than anything known to Western science. Certain flower blossoms, scattered in a stream, bring the fish dead—and perfectly edible—to the surface. Another drug, when eaten, makes the body smell of fresh-cut cedar, and is much used by young girls being courted. Another actually toughens the skin, so that thorns will not pierce it.

And of another Mr. Carnochan writes: "I can say without reservation that 'kingo' has the most dangerous potentialities of any drug within my ken." For, in a twinkling, it absolutely robs a man of initiative; he can not do one thing of his own will, and is left, if uncommanded, in a state of complete passivity. Mr. Carnochan sat in his tent one day and tried it himself. For several hours he could hear the clock tick and watch the hands move, and he wasn't even able to lift a pencil for the notes he planned to make. Then the drug left him in an instant and he was wholly himself, with no after effects.

All these powers the snake-men wield—a solemn oath binding them from any bad use. There is a good deal of ritual, and some of the concoctions are on the "sympathetic" side (the snake serum holds hyena brains, for craft, and a lion's larynx, for the roar to terrify enemies—but snake tails and heads give the efficacy). Yet in practicing medicine the snake-man is as cool and to the point as a family physician, and the drugs do work.

All of this you'll find at most satisfying length in "The Empire of the Snakes." Personalities of the leading snake-men, trips around Tnganyika and Kenya to learn more of the cult, scenes of incredible magic in action—here is a story which will hold you utterly spellbound.

That is, if you like snakes.

John Clare

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

EVERY now and then in the course of desultory reading one finds a reference to the poetry of John Clare, unread by most and unknown to many. In England a new edition of his poems in two volumes bears witness to the fact that he is not quite forgotten. The literary supplement of the London Times for February 21 devotes its first page and two columns of the second saying that "his place is secure among the poets." I wonder if it is; but anyhow, I suppose there will always be some readers and the tragic story of his life would make an effective drama.

• • • •

In one of Leslie Stephen's characteristic sentences, he came perhaps nearer to a final judgment than the over-enthusiastic praise of the Times critic. Stephen wrote. "Though Clare shows fine natural taste and has many exquisite descriptive touches, his poetry does not rise to a really high level; and, though extraordinary under the circumstances, requires for its appreciation that the circumstances should be remembered."

What were the circumstances?

John Clare was born in 1783 in Northamptonshire, England; he was the son of a poor laborer on the dole, parish relief; he attended school in winter evenings; became an undergardener; was inspired by reading Thompson's famous poem, "The Season"—this was in 1808; he began to write songs; got into rather wild company; was a militia man and then a tramp; issued a proposal to print his original poems; and his first volume actually appeared in 1820.

• • • •

He failed as a farmer; annuities were given him by wealthy friends who believed in his talent. But he lived in chronic poverty, had a terrible existence; finally in 1837 lost his mind, after publishing several volumes of poems. He survived until 1864. He spent 27 years in the Northampton Asylum, and was sufficiently conscious of his tragedy to write verses about it. He longed for freedom in solitude as the following verses show:

I long for scenes where man has never trod,
A place where woman never smiled nor wept;
There to abide with my Creator, God,
And sleep as I in childhood sweetly slept.

Nation's Editors Meet Here Today

President to See Newspaper Executives.

Washington took on a decidedly journalistic tinge yesterday as editors and managing editors from all parts of the country arrived for the eleventh annual convention of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

The convention will be held at the National Press Club, beginning today, and will extend through Saturday, ending with a banquet at the Willard Hotel, which will be addressed by Senator Borah and Frank H. Simonds, noted international writer.

This evening President Roosevelt has invited the editors to the White House for an informal "off-the-record" chat.

Donald R. Richberg and other members of the New Deal are scheduled speakers at the convention, which will also be addressed by many editors and writers on foreign affairs.

Night Cometh.

THE shadows are encroaching upon the hillside steep, the long night is approaching when weary men may sleep; when they may sleep forgetting the labor and the sweating, the weariness and fretting, in rest profound and deep. The hours seem slow in passing, amid the workday scenes, where we are all amassing the price of pork and beans; the price of pies of custard, of pepper, salt and mustard, and we are tired and flustered, we know what trouble means. But there's a balm provided to soothe our aching heads, when we are gently guided unto our divers beds; the "good night" words are spoken, and at that sign and token there comes a rest unbroken for nerves all worn to shreds. Until the gracious dawning we think no more of woe; we think no more of pawning our hats to raise some dough; we live in dreams exalted, in dreams that are not halted, forget the bonds defaulted, the money that we owe. For hours we sleep like thunder, remote from discontent, and do not pause to wonder just how we'll pay the rent; we think no more of going to breadlines when it's snowing, we think no more of blowing our last and bottom cent. We have our grievous troubles throughout the weary day, but in the night they're bubbles that break and blow away; in dreams good luck's prevailing, there is no sound of wailing, and we are gayly sailing upon a moonlit bay.

Compromise On Bonus Blow To Confidence

Cash Cost Of $500,000,000 Is Far Outweighed By Loss Of Prestige.

By Elliott Thurston.

ALL those who hoped that President Roosevelt would stand by his guns and fight the bonus will be sorely disappointed by his evident acceptance of Senator Pat Harrison's compromise. Here was a magnificent opportunity for the President to revive faith in his purposes and promises by holding out against the raiders. Instead he appears to have given in before the fight really began.

Probably no single thing would do more to reestablish the country's wavering confidence in this Administration than for Mr. Roosevelt to prove that he meant what he said so well and so vigorously in the past about opposing a bonus raid. It would furnish a conclusive answer to those who challenge the Administration's good faith. To surrender, in advance, on an issue on which there was every prospect of winning an important victory, economically and, above all, morally and psychologically, is to leave champions of this Administration without even the shadow of apology for the action.

FOR the fight very likely could have been won had it been made. There are 45 members of the present Senate who voted against the Patman bill in 1934. This is 12 more than enough to sustain a veto. Even if the President lost out in the last ditch, it would have been better to make the fight than to run. If this Administration does not have the spine to stand firm on this issue, in the face of the brave words which it has spread upon the record, then how can anybody hope it will fight for any principle? Government by continual compromise can only destroy all faith. Here was an issue which from every standpoint, most of all Mr. Roosevelt's own past declarations, demanded a battle in which no white flags would ever be run up.

It is hard to understand by what reasoning Mr. Roosevelt was induced to give in. True, the House overwhelmingly passed the Patman greenbacking bill. That was expected. The Senate might pass it. But the chances are better than even that the bill could be killed in the Senate on the veto. Mr. Roosevelt is now armed with the vast patronage power of his $4,880,000,000 relief bill. It is absurd to suppose that his leadership, backed by this potent power, is so enfeebled that he could not win out in the Senate.

Nor is the bill satisfactory to anybody. The veterans want the whole hog, of course. The pretense that giving them a part of the hog now will stave off future pensions is too shabby to need much comment. This Congress can not bind its successors, and caving in now without a murmur, far from stopping, will only encourage the pension raid, just as the President's surrender to the silverites served only to whet this appetite for more, as has been so painfully proved in all too short space of time.

• • • •

ASSUMING that Senator Harrison's estimate is correct, his compromise will cost the Treasury $500,000,000 more than the present law. That is a prodigal price to pay even in this day of staggering figures. The moral price is enormously bigger. Unquestionably the Harrison compromise is far better than the Patman greenbacks. But there are some at least who would count it far cheaper to pay out the greenbacks and save a few shreds of moral principle than to hand over $500,000,000 and with it that fluttering pennon which the late Mr. Justice Holmes suggested as the symbol of honor.

All of this assumes, of course, that the President has yielded to the velvet touch of Pat Harrison. It may not be too late to turn back to the admirable stand which Mr. Roosevelt had previously taken. Pat Harrison is an overworked and harrassed leader who has serious election worries of his own on his mind. One can sympathize deeply with him without being able to see virtue in his $500,000,000 handout.

At this hour Mr. Roosevelt is not committed publicly to the Harrison plan. And if he succumbed somewhat rashly to this seductive Senator's blandishments when they discussed the matter in private on Sunday, it would be far better to disappoint the Senator than countless citizens who would like to retain their faith in the essential integrity and courage of this Administration.

For far beyond the $500,000,000 cost in cash is the vastly greater cost in public confidence. If compromise had been indicated in this case, if the President's leadership were in peril, if there were only something to be salvaged that was worth preserving, the $500,000,000 might be a fair or even a cheap price to pay. As matters stand, the cost in confidence is a price which this Administration can not afford to pay, regardless of the dollars involved.

Answer to a Letter of Invitation to Go Trout Fishing.

Dear Sir: Thanks for your invitation to open the trout season. Your suggestions as to equipment and your warnings about bringing along necessary paraphernalia have been duly noted, and I am glad to assure you that you need have no misgivings in this respect. I have practically everything except the type of flies needed this time of year, and wil have to leave this to you. (If you have a few spare 6-foot leaders, it might save me the trouble of looking mine up at this time.)

• • • •

We ought to have some splendid fishing. Conditions are better than a year ago, the streams have been well stocked and I am rarin' to go. I have not been able to locate my reel yet, but if I can't dig it up I know you will have a spare one, as always. Mine isn't much good, anyhow. (By the way, I will leave the matter of hooks to you, in case we use worms. And will you see to getting enough for us both?)

• • • •

Let me know what train to take and where to meet you. I find that I left my creel at the cottage and have none at home, but maybe you have an extra one which I can use. I have been looking forward all winter to this trip and have been accumulating equipment steadily—in fact, I now have everything except wading boots. These slipped my mind somehow and if you have an odd pair around you might bring them along. If not, you can fish a while and then take off your boots and let me fish a while. (Say, Gus, have you got an extra woolen shirt? I have located a tie, but can't find the shirt somehow or other. And did I leave my old soft hat at your house last year?)

• • • •

I suggest that we get an early start and fish all day. (I assume you have taken care of the fishing license and got one for me.)

• • • •

Incidentally, the wife mislaid that new tapered line I bought last summer. She still hopes to locate it, but if not we will have to do the best we can, eh? That was a nice line you let me take last year, and I meant to return it. (Have you any extra woolen socks?)

Well, it is great of you to ask me along. Thanks again, and let's hope they're biting.

Your old friend,

ELMER.

P. S.—I am depending on you for a rod.

Resolution First Order of Business at Associated Press Meeting.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—A resolution in recognition of the services of Adolph S. Ochs of the New York Times was the first order of business today of the board of directors of the Associated Press. The resolution adopted will be conveyed to the members in annual session Monday.

Following is text of the resolution:

"The board of directors of the Associated Press has adopted the following resolution for transmission to the annual meeting, as an expression both of the board and the full membership, on the death of Adolph S. Ochs:

"Whereas the death of Adolph S. Ochs removes from the membership of the Associated Press one who has been identified with it since its organization, of which he was a charter member; and

"Whereas his unfailing loyalty to the Associated Press, and his constructive efforts in behalf of its development, have contributed in large measure to the standard of efficiency it has attained; and

"Whereas the loss of one whose advice, encouragement and support has been so markedly felt in the steady broadening of the service as to win for him the admiration, the confidence and the personal esteem of the full membership; therefore

"Be is resolved, That in the death of Adolph S. Ochs the Associated Press loses one of its most valuable and most highly esteemed members, and the journalism of America one whose high standard of ethics, and whose brilliant achievement in the field of journalism placed him among the foremost of the newspaper publishers of the world.

"Ripe in years, and after a long and an honorable career, he leaves a record of notable achievement as publisher, patriot and philanthropist.

"His virtues and the generosity of his companionship endeared him to the full membership, which in his death shares the sorrow of his associates and his family.

Anna May Wong Asks Slash in Tax Claim

By the Associated Press.

Anna May Wong, screen and vaudeville actress, giving her address as Los Angeles, petitioned the Board of Tax Appeals yesterday for the redetermination of a 1932 income tax claim of $880.

Her petition charged the Bureau of Internal Revenue made errors, chiefly in discounting travel, costume and other vaudeville expenses, in computing the assessment. She denied having a net income subject to a normal tax of $15,669.

Illinois Senate Votes School 'Red' Inquiry

Springfield, Ill., April 17 (AP).—The State Senate tonight took a hand in the controversy over the alleged teaching of communism in Illinois schools by voting its own investigation into the matter.

Adopting a resolution offered by Senator Charles Baker (Republican), of Monroe Center, the Senate authorized appointment of a committee of five to inquire into reports of communistic teachings in tax-supported schools and in privately endowed institutions accorded tax exemption by the State.

New World Wheat Pact Object of Parley May 22

London, April 17 (AP).—A new world wheat pact, to substitute for the bruised and battered 1933 agreement which was repudiated five months ago by Argentina, will be sought when the representatives of 21 nations gather here May 22.

The American and Canadian delegates were represented as convinced that another international wheat crisis is inevitable unless an agreement can be reached, now that the effects of the 1934 drought, beneficial to the wheat market, no longer are to be felt.

Laura Ingalls to Try Again for Speed Mark

Albuquerque, N. Mex., April 17 (AP).—Laura Ingalls, undaunted by dust that halted her attempt at a new transcontinental speed record yesterday, headed her plane back to Burbank, Calif., tonight to prepare for another try.

"I expect to start East after this 'little practice flight' as soon as possible," she said.

She said a week or ten days may be required at Burbank to repair any damage that might have been done by the dust she encountered.

France, Russia In Full Accord On Aid Treaty

Laval, Litvinoff Confer; Signing at Moscow in May Slated.

By the United Press.

Geneva, April 17.—The French delegation announced tonight that France and Soviet Russia had reached complete agreement on the general lines of the projected Franco-Russian pact of mutual assistance to preserve peace in Europe.

The understanding was reached after secret conversations tonight between French Foreign Minister Pierre Laval and Maxim Litvinoff, Rusian foreign commissar.

The draft will be submitted to the two governments for approval and experts will draw the final text.

The pact will be signed during Laval's visit to Moscow, originally set for next week, but probably to be postponed now until the first week in May.

It also was confirmed officially that Laval will visit Warsaw on his way to Moscow, instead of conferring with Poland after the Russian visit.

This concession apparently won the approval of Polish Foreign Minister Josef Beck to the three-power resolution condemning German rearmament, approved by the league council today, because the Poles are anxious to talk with the French before signing the Franco-Russian accord.

This adherence to that pact now seems assured, despite earlier opposition to any such abbreviated Eastern Locarno without Germany.

Laval is returning to Paris before hurrying East on what he regards as the most important French peace mission to Moscow since Raymond Poincare visited St. Petersburg on the eve of the World War in 1914, cementing Russian friendship, which brought her in on the side of the allies.

304,000 Trees Planted In Maryland This Year

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, April 17.—F. W. Besley, State forester, said today approximately 300,000 forest trees and 4,000 roadside beautification trees from the State nurseries have been sent out in Maryland this year.

Large numbers of forest trees—principally pines, locust and poplars—have been planted on abandoned farmlands by land owners, he asserted. This work has taken a new emphasis since economic conditions have forced much "poor" land from cultivation.

Poles Wreck Homes Of Corridor Germans

Danzig, April 17 (U.P.).—Polish anti-German attacks in the corridor continued today, members of the Sokol organization being chiefly responsible. Mobs reportedly entered German homes, destroying the furnishings. However, there have been no further mass demonstrations.

Roosevelt Says Mint Goes Well With Lamb

President Roosevelt indicated yesterday that he was fully aware that in remodeling the White House grounds some time ago the landscapers had destroyed the old White House mint bed.

The President had suggested that conferences this summer be held out-of-doors on a rear porch, which brought up the subject of mint in the first place.

Agent Designates State Liquor Shops

Martinsburg, Charles Town to Get Dispensaries.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., April 17.—Designation of stores and agencies for the dispensing of liquor in the Eastern Panhandle under the new State system was announced today through J. A. Proctor, of Berkely Springs, deputy leasing agent for the West Virginia Liquor Commission.

A store will be opened here at 251 North Queen street, in the heart of the downtown section. It is not expected to be opened before May 1.

A store was also designated in Charles Town on the lower floor of the Jefferson County Telephone Building in the downtown section.

Agent Proctor said there would be "agencies" designated for both Harpers Ferry and Shepherdstown, where State liquor would be handled in connection with another business rather than establishing a separate store.

Japanese Exhibit Set April 24 in Warrenton

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., April 17.—Mrs. Katherine Fox Bowman has issued invitations to the Woman's Auxiliary of St. James Episcopal Church and similar organizations in the other churches of Warrenton to attend a Japanese exhibit the afternoon of April 24.

Mrs. Bowman, chairman of the Fauquier County Chapter, American Red Cross, spent several months in Japan this fall as a delegate to the International Red Cross conference in Tokyo.

Italy Is Relaxing As Stresa Result

Mobilization Abandoned; Pope Is Hopeful.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, April 17.—Mobilization of the class of 1911, which was ordered after Germany's announcement of a conscript army, is being gradually abandoned, military quarters revealed tonight, as a result of greater assurance of peace achieved at the recent Stresa conference.

A government spokesman said the conference "produced a pronounced loosening of the tension throughout Europe."

Pope Pius expressed the same view to Bishop Kearney of Salt Lake City today when he said, "The European situation has improved in the last few days."

Part of the class of 1911 already has been sent to East Africa as a result of tension between Italy and Ethiopia, but cessation of mobilization will permit 160,000 men to resume civilian work without uncertainty as to the immediate future.

England to Bar Ratios as Topic In Naval Talks

Program Given Germany, Soviet Lists Technical Angles Only.

By the Associated Press.

London, April 17.—Great Britain has tabooed the discussion of fleet ratios and political subjects during the forthcoming Anglo-German and Anglo-Russian bilateral naval conversations.

The program given recently to Germany and also communicated informally to Russia, it was learned today, includes only technical negotiations on a qualitative and quantitative basis—categories and tonnage.

The British, who will oppose strongly a large German navy, do not want any references made to specific ratios which might open up a new controversy among the world naval powers on the ratio subject before a general naval conference which may be held this year.

Discussion May 2.

It was expected that naval matters would be discussed during debate on the government's foreign policy in the House of Commons May 2, as the Labor members plan to raise all subjects connected with the European situation.

The British believe the Reich needs a larger sea force than it has, but will insist it be considerably under 35 per cent of that of Britain.

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald told the Commons today that the Stresa conference diplomats agreed "in spite of the changed situation," to push the contemplated negotiations of a general settlement with Germany.

"Great Britain and Italy," said the prime minister, "both reaffirmed their Locarno obligations at Stresa. Let me repeat. Great Britain assumed no new commitments at Stresa. We have not condoned Germany's action, but on the contrary we have made it plain that we regard it (Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler's announcement of a conscript army) as a grave cause of unsettlement to any international organization of peace and order.

"States United."

"The three states represented at the conference departed, not as separate units broken by the undoubted difficulties they had to deal with, but as a combination of states pledged to keep together and try to find a peaceful solution for the present dangers in co-operation with every state willing to associate itself with their work."

The government head also told the House that "Germany's military claims of March 16, which had already, as a matter of fact, been far advanced in execution, and the method of Germany's announcement, influenced in one way of another the whole Stresa negotiations."

Pilot Hurt in Plane Crash.

Sarasota, Fla., April 17 (AP).—Blinded by a swirl of the powdered insecticide with which he was "dusting" celery crops by airplane, Capt. V. C. Taylor, of Fort Lauderdale, was slightly hurt and his plane wrecked today in a forced landing.

Noted Fans Watch Game At Stadium

List Includes President, Officials and Capital Social Leaders.

Note of Color Added to Crowd by Women in Smart Ensembles.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

"Take me out to the ball game!" has been the cry of Washingtonians for the last few weeks, and when the cry went forth yesterday everybody was there to see the home team play the Philadelphia Athletics.

It was all very much like a spectacle outside an ancient Roman arena, where senators, statesmen and military men forgot their dignity in the scuffle to see the famous chariot race, or to watch the contest between the world's most famous gladiators.

No togas were torn yesterday, but many an overcoat was treated in an unruly manner as the crowds pressed forward with a "root, root, root for the home team."

Cheers Greet President.

What a crowd! Even the fact that the game was postponed from the previous day because of bad weather and the gusty chill wind could not lower the spirits of that assemblage as they watched the Nationals, managed by the popular Bucky Harris, start the season.

Just before the game was called the bands stood at attention as the President's car was driven onto the field and up to the presidential box. Cheers greeted the Chief Executive, with his party, as they took their places, waited for the strains of the "Star-Spangled Banner" to die away, and then, amid cheering, the President tossed out the first ball.

With the President were the Vice President, Mr. John Nance Garner; the Postmaster General, Mr. James A. Farley; Col. Marvin H. McIntyre and his son, Mr. Kennedy McIntyre; Mr. Stephen Early, Dr. Ross T. McIntire, Col. Edwin M. Watson, military aid to the President, and Capt. Wilson Brown, naval aid.

Diplomats Among Crowd.

The Spanish Embassy was represented by the Minister Counselor, Senor Don Luis Yrujo, and the First Secretary, Senor Don Luis Olivares, who had with them Mrs. Eldridge Jordan and Miss Jacqueline Story. Miss Story wore a smart brown sports suit with a heavy top coat, and had taken off her small brown hat to turn her blond curls loose in the wind. Mrs. Jordan wore a black coat trimmed with gray fox and a black hat. The former Ambassador of Spain, Senor Don Juan Francisco de Cardenas, was probably the greatest baseball fan among the diplomats, having represented his government in the only three countries in the world where baseball is played—Japan, Cuba and the United States. From the Japanese Embassy there was a large group who seemed deeply interested in the game.

A large gathering of smart women, as great fans as the men, added a note of color to the crowd. Smart women in tweeds and topcoats, smart women in furs and orchids, and women even smart in unnecessary raincoats.

With Mrs. Edward Beale McLean were Rear Admiral and Mrs. Emory S. Land, both ardent baseball fans. Mrs. Land was in smart black, mourning for her mother, Mrs. Dwight Chester.

Nearby were the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, with Capt. and Mrs. W. W. Galbraith, and still farther down the line of boxes were Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Myer with Mr. Edward Lowry. Mrs. Myer wore a costume of beige and brown plaid woolen, with a smart brown hat and a mink coat.

Sutherlands See Game.

Former Senator and Mrs. Howard Sutherland were there, much interested in the team which their son-in-law is managing. Their daughter, Mrs. Harris, the former Elizabeth Sutherland, was also present. Mrs. Sutherland wore a suit of navy blue with a hat to match and a scarf of sables.

The former Commissioner of the District of Columbia, Mr. Tighlman Hendrick, was present with Mr. and Mrs. Carl Corby, the latter wearing a sport suit of brown and yellow with a brown hat.

Artist Creates Series of Print Dress Designs

Complete Set Is Shown at F Street Store; 'Flapper Frocks' Displayed.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THE SKYLINE of New York seen through half closed, sleepy eyes of a flower garden in the misty twilight, Malibu Beach, a riot of colored parasols, a cocktail hour mirrored in champagne bubbles, the glamour, the glory, the pathos and comedy of Hollywood . . . all these have been captured by the pen of Peter Arno and presented to us in a new series of print dress designs.

Arno, inimitable artist of laughter and satire, has done a master job. He has shown that humor and beauty may be combined in fantastic, impressionistic prints that bring a buoyancy and vitality to textile designing. His accomplishment is neither freakish, nor faddish. It is impossible to view the fascinating prints without feeling that there is a new spirit, a new life in mere prints which must surely lift all prints out of the commonplace into a new loveliness.

The complete series of attractive Arno prints are on sale in an F street shop. They are winning such acclaim that it will pay you to shop early for the intriguing style of the dresses, plus the brilliance of their design has turned them into veritable sugar plums for the early bird.

The dresses are all $16.95. In the misses' department they are shown in sizes ranging from 12 to 20. In the junior section they come in sizes 11 to 17.

Strawberry Masque Cream.

Twenty magical minutes with a certain luscious-looking and luxurious-feeling cream masque removes the time-telling marks from your weary face. After a long, dragged-out day, when weariness lies heavy on your brow and the total of your years may be counted in the fine lines around your eyes, you look at the clock and wonder how you can brave the unfriendly lights of evening and the searching eyes of the men that matters.

To your rescue at this eleventh hour comes a popular beauty stylist who offers you her strawberry masque, a delightful, soothing, rejuvenating cream.

At any time her offer comes to you like the answer to a prayer, but this week especially it's that. Ordinarily it sells for $3 a jar. Now—until Saturday—you may buy it for $1 along with any other $1.50 purchase in her line.

"Flapper Frocks" for Spring.

Gladys Parker's "flapper frocks" might have been designed originally with the flippant young thing in mind, but ever since, delighted young and not-so-young ladies have been proving that the saucy, pert and utterly devastating dresses are just the things for all those who want their wardrobes to have an extra dash of chic.

Today Miss Parker has sent her favorite model—Betty, to us—down from New York to model the outrageously cute frocks she's featuring for spring. And Gladys will not only model. She'll tell you lots of things about these frocks, for instance, why one is called Sissie and another Buttercup. She's just as likely as not to let you into the secret of what inspired them. Best of all she'll help you pick out a dress which just suits you!

The Gladys Parker frocks are so conservatively priced that they take all budgets into consideration and promise to break none!

Beware the Moths!

The place: The large front show window of a local store. The time depicted: June, July, August and September.

Dramatis Personae: The Moth Clan, Sadie, George, Maude, Marge, Henry and Mary.

The whole bunch is gathered around an elaborately laid table. On each plate is feast of furs. Sadie says, "Do I like Caracul? And this salad is simply foxy!"

George: Beaver salad with leopard steak—well done. It will be well done when I finish!

Mary: Sadie, I could just die eating musrat and fitch!

And so it goes. The play of the Forgotten Moths, put on to remind you that just such a banquet scene might take place in your own closet. In order to guard against it why not send your furs to the new large polar storage vault in this downtown store?

This BUSINESS of LIVING

16-Year-Old Embarrassed by Father's Intrusion When Boy Friends Call.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I want some advice about my father. I am 16 years old and just beginning to go with boys. I have always been crazy about my dad, but recently he has embarrassed me on several occasions. He takes a great interest in who I go with, and when a boy comes to see me dad won't listen to mother about leaving us alone but comes in and sits around and talks to the boy and me like he was our own age, and while we are talking about what show to go see, or whether to dance, or something, he offers his own suggestions as to what would be the thing to do.

• • • •

He's a great reader and often, if I don't get home until around 11 or 12, he's up reading and he always comes in again and winds up the evening right in our midst. I don't know how I can make him see he is spoiling my fun, and a dead weight on the occasion, without hurting his feelings. And I wouldn't do that for the world. I haven't even told mother how I feel, but I think she must guess, for she often tries to persuade him to stay in the other room with her.

• • • •

What should I do, Miss Haworth? I know he wants my boy friends to think he's a good sport, but his presence makes them uncomfortable, and he embarrasses me by telling them what a grand girl I am. Please suggest some tactful remedy for this situation.

SUB-DEB.

Bear With Father.

DEAR SUB-DEB: Frankly, I don't see much you can do without hurting your father rather cruelly. However, it often becomes almost inescapably necessary for a child who is the victim of doting parental fondness to lash out rather cruelly in instinctively fighting free from unwholesome emotional entanglements.

• • • •

Parents who have devoted all the years of their parenthood to building a close comradeship with their children not infrequently find it bitterly hard to let the youngsters go scot-free when the latter arrive at an age suitable for trying their wings in a universe of contemporary associates and adolescent interests. That may be your father's problem.

• • • •

He may feel the concluding chapters of a beautiful oneness in a father-daughter relationship are being written now; and may be seeking to savour to the fullest the last days of that rare experience. If so, he is fumbling a bit, of course; and being a bit pathetic in his awkward wistfulness. I advise you to bear with him, as generously and sweetly and understandingly as you can.

• • • •

I don't believe you will ever regret it if you wait a few more years—until you are 19 or 20, say—before venturing to take issue with him about his yearning intrusion into your social life. As a matter of fact, by that time he may have become unutterably bored with the singular sameness of all your young men and have retired to the other room of his own accord; or you may have lost your self-consciousness in entertaining suitors, and find your father an inestimably valuable measuring stick against which to test the worth of contenders for your favor and an objectively interesting social ornament to your drawing room.

• • • •

So long as your boy friends continue to come, I shouldn't worry about their being made to feel a bit uncomfortable in your father's presence. If they like you at all, they will value your society the more highly in that they find it a little difficult to secure in full measure.

De Hellebrandth Sisters Deny Individuality Is Lacking.

By Elizabeth Perron Putnam.

HER hair set in symmetrical waves, her eyebrows shaped to fit the prevalent pattern, her mouth bright with the newest shade of lip stick, the typical American woman emerges from her weekly visit to the beauty parlor.

"Standardized! Utterly lacking in individuality! True beauty is a thing of the past!" the scornful exclaim.

But Bertha and Elena de Hellebrandth, Austrian artists, whose paintings are now on exhibition at the National Gallery of Art, are quick to defend the American woman against these charges.

"The American woman has just as much individuality as the European woman," they assert. "Of course, she does conform to certain popular standards of beauty, but so do the women of every other land.

Beauty Not External.

"Besides these things are superficial," Elena said. "No beauty parlor can destroy a woman's individuality or cause beauty not to exist. Beauty comes from within, it is the something brilliant in a woman's face that makes other people turn to look at her, it is a light that shines out from her eyes.

"What makes that light?" Elena paused only a moment before answering. "I think it is interest, a vital interest in some one thing, and a greater interest that reaches out and includes all people and all things. Another word for it is awareness, an intense awareness that makes a person feel keenly and deeply, and that makes other people feel she is vividly alive."

But while a woman's beauty lies in her eyes her charm is in her mouth, Bertha explained.

"That is why a beauty parlor alone can not make a woman charming," she explained. A woman's mouth is charming if she has made her life charming. For a woman's mouth shows what she has done to life. It tells if she is generous or mean; if she is kind and tolerant, or bitter and grim; it tells you if she has a sense of humor. It is the index to her character.

The American woman, judged by her mouth, is usually a kind person, Bertha said.

Have Self-Control.

"Another thing I have noted about American women," she added, "is that, with the exception of the English, they have more self-control than the women of any other country."

"But," Elena said, "of course no two artists see the same thing in a person's face. By that I do not mean the general outlines aren't the same, but one artist will emphasize certain qualities in a subject's face, and another will bring out entirely different qualities. Even my sister and I, who have lived together always, have been practically inseparable, have studied under the same teachers, paint different pictures of the same person.

"For each artist has to portray the truth as he sees it," Bertha explained, "and what is true to him may be entirely different from what is true to other artists. What, then, is the truth in art? I don' think one person can decide for others.

Interesting Illustration.

One of the most interesting illustrations of the difference in the work of the sister artists is shown in their portraits of Leopold III, King of Belgium. The faces of the "two kings" are the same, but Bertha, the realist, has emphasized the practical side of the King's nature, has shown him as the everyday person who runs the practical affairs of the state, who is a husband and father.

Elena, the idealist, has brought out all the idealistic qualities of King Leopold's nature, has portrayed him as the far-seeing young ruler, looking forward to great things for his country.

The paintings by the Misses de Hellebrandth will remain on exhibition throughout this month.

"Aries."

IF APRIL 18 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m., from 3 to 5 p. m., and from 8 to 10 p. m. The danger periods are from 9 to 11 a. m., from 5 to 7 p. m., and from 10 p. m. until midnight.

No matter how much self-control may be required to keep you from finding fault with anyone on this date, you will be wise not to express adverse thoughts aloud. Maintaining a tolerant attitude toward those with whom you are thrown in close contact will prevent possibly a clash of desires diametrically opposite to each other.

A spirit of give and take will prove most helpful in business transactions. In cases of dispute arbitration should be resorted to before any drastic action is taken.

Married and engaged couples, as well as those entertaining hopes for an engagement ring, should be very careful to keep careful watch over their tempers on this date.

If a woman and April 18 is your birthday, do not be too ready to believe everything you hear, especially if it is of a gossipy nature. You should have a great deal of dramatic ability.

The child born on April 18, from kindergarten age on through its life, should possess the virtue of being absolutely truthful, as well as trustworthy.

If a man and April 18 is your natal day, you should be blessed with a very strong character, as well as a striking personality. Be careful not to be too exacting in your home or office.

Warm Weather Ensemble Suited For Office, Tea and Dining Out

Pattern No. 920.

HERE IS AN ENSEMBLE in tune with our national custom of rushing from office to tea party, or concluding a shopping tour with an informal dinner engagement. It is a perfect design for warm weather wear. The frock alone is cool and comfortable for mid-day heat; the jacket adds just the right amount of formality for street wear, just enough protection for cool summer mornings. A double-corded collar with tie, and a double-corded belt, are charming details of the frock. The center front and back seams of the skirt end in pleats, and there is an inverted pleat at the center back of the fitted jacket.

This pattern is cut in sizes 14 to 42. Size 18 (36) requires 6⅛ yards of 39-inch material for the entire ensemble.

Science Makes Great Progress In Averting Injuries at Birth

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

"Deformed, unfinished, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionably
That dogs bark at me as I halt by them."

Shakespeare recognized in King Richard not only a premature birth but a birth injury, the result of which was a deformed body.

Since 1861 when W. J. Little read his famous paper before the Obstetrical Society of London, "The Influence of Difficult Labor . . ." more and more attention has been directed toward the type of injury that may result from the pressure to which the infant's body is subjected in passing through the birth canal.

Approximately 150,000 children are born dead or die shortly after delivery in the United States each year, and about one-half of these deaths may be traced to pressure damage within the skull.

We have no accurate means of knowing just how many infants have suffered irreparable damage to the brain. According to Edgar A. Doll, a fair percentage of mental deficiency may be laid at the door of birth injuries.

Sometimes pressure will cause injury to the nerves that lie within the structures of the armpit. This is known as Erb's palsy. If the injury is slight healing will take place with complete recovery. If, however, the pressure has ruptured some of the blood vessels with hemorrhage into the tissues adhesions may form during healing and the arm to be permanently crippled.

We are well aware that hemorrhage into the brain (intracranial) may result in paralysis, since there is no possible escape for the blood. Modern followers of obstetrics are unanimous in the opinion that both in premature births and in breech deliveries there is a higher incidence of intracranial hemorrhage. Occasionally the covering membranes of the brain are torn, leading to bleeding, and most writers believe that damage of this character follows prolonged and difficult labor. Could instruments (forceps) be the cause? The conclusion appears to be that there is far less danger in a proper instrumental delivery than in permitting intense pressure on the infant's head to be unduly prolonged.

Home Candy Easter Egg Makers Cautioned About Temperature

Product Should Start With Fondant Center and Dipping Fork Is Recommended to Save Time and Your Chocolate Supply.

By Dorothea Duncan.

LET'S GO professional and make our own candy Easter eggs. Like the best dipped chocolates, the eggs should start with a fondant center. The fondant may be made the day before and placed in a cool spot in a covered container until the eggs are ready to be shaped and dipped.

You will need a few special pieces of equipment. The double boiler, the tray and waxed paper are easily bought or borrowed. A candy thermometer is essential because temperature plays such an important role in the successful chocolate dipping. A dipping fork rather than an eating fork will save time and chocolate.

This fork is inexpensive to buy or clever fingers may fashion it of heavy wire. Take a piece of wire about 16 inches long and double it. The two loose ends will form the tines. Twist the two pieces several times at the center to form a slender handle.

Best Chocolate Advised.

Ordinary chocolate won't do, so be certain that you get what you ask for, a chocolate that has been especially prepared for dipping candy. You will have better results, which means a smoother, glossier finish as well as a better flavor, if you buy the very best grade of chocolate. Your grocer can help you with this item.

Now you are ready to begin. Melt the chocolate in the top of the double boiler, having the water merely luke-warm (110 degrees Fahrenheit) but never place the water over the flame. Refill the bottom with water as necessary to keep the water at 110 degrees Fahrenheit. Be sure that in refilling no water gets into the chocolate.

Stir the chocolate frequently while it is being melted as this will prevent the chocolate from becoming too hot on the bottom or sides of the pan. If the chocolate is melted at the proper temperature it will take about 30 minutes per pound. The thermometer should be kept in the chocolate during the entire time of melting and watched frequently so that it never registers higher than 90 degrees Fahrenheit.

If the eggs are to be rolled in coconut or chopped nuts after dipping they may be started when the chocolate has cooled to 80 degrees Fahrenheit. If they are to be left plain the surface will be smoother and glossier if they are dipped at 76-70 degrees Fahrenheit.

When the chocolate cools to below 70 degrees Fahrenheit it may start to lump and will be too thick for dipping, so it may be remelted over luke-warm water.

The temperature of the room is also an important feature in the successful dipping of chocolates. Sixty degrees F. or below is ideal and if the window by your table is open, so much the better. The air should be as free from moisture as possible, so never try to dip your chocolates in a steamy room.

When lifting the fondant egg from its bath of chocolate turn the fork over to drop the egg off on waxed paper. As the fork leaves the egg, give it a slight twirl. This last little touch will add a professional look to your product.

You will have more success, at least until you become an expert, if you make the candy eggs fairly small, for they are easier to handle.

The fondant before shaping may be divided into as many parts as you desire flavors. Part may be left plain. Another portion may be flattened out and reworked with a bit of shredded coconut. If coloring or liquid flavoring is added to the fondant, it should be poured carefully into a small hole in the center of the piece and then worked in with the hands.

Any chocolate that is left over after the dipping is finished may be poured into a tin lined with waxed paper and kept for the next dipping, or sprinkled with nuts or coconut and cut into squares.

Grace Is Called To Tell Details Of Mellon Deal

Introduction of Letters on Steel Firm Sale to Be Fought.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, April 17.—Attention of the Board of Tax Appeals hearing Andrew W. Mellon's protest against a $3,089,000 additional assessment on his 1931 income was directed today by the Government to negotiations that led to Bethlehem Steel's acquisition of the McClintic-Marshall Corporation in which Mellon had a 30 per cent interest.

Simultaneously Fred R. Shearer, who is helping Robert H. Jackson present the Government's case against the former Treasury Secretary, announced he has called Eugene G. Grace, president, and R. E. McMath, vice president, of Bethlehem, to testify next Tuesday.

H. A. Moore, head of a New York law firm which represented Bethlehem in the negotiations, also will be a witness, Shearer said.

Hogan Contests Letters.

William D. Fugeaut, employed in Moore's office, was the Government's first witness to deal with the negotiation period in the $21,000,000 transaction in which the Government claims Mellon owes $1,000,000 tax. Most of the afternoon's hearing was taken up in his identifying various correspondence in regard to the deal.

Two letters in which the law firm advised Mellon on October 27 and November 14, 1930, of the negotiations were read into the record. Bethlehem acquired the McClintic-Marshall assets on February 10, 1931.

Attorney Frank J. Hogan, representing Mellon, served notice he will contest introduction of the other correspondence as evidence, most of it being letters between Moore's firm and Pittsburgh lawyers representing McClintic-Marshall. These were marked for identification.

Contends Actual Sale.

Shearer had used most of the three days of this ninth week of the hearing in tracing records of the transaction through books of Bethlehem Steel. He is contending Bethlehem actually bought McClintic-Marshall's steel fabricating business and did not participate in a non-taxable merger, as Mellon's counsel claims.

McClintic-Marshall stockholders received 240,000 shares of Bethlehem common stock and $8,200,000 of its bonds, for assets that remained 40 days after approximately $44,000,000 in other assets had been transferred to the Union Construction Co.

Purchase of the 240,000 shares of stock by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation (parent concern) with $19,000,000 cash taken from a pool account; recording of the ownership in names of nominees and of the assets to a subsidiary, Bethlehem Mines.

Terms Entries Wrong.

A transfer of this stock asset from Bethlehem Mines to its parent concern and then to a newly formed McClintic-Marshall Co. of Pennsylvania, which acquired assets of the old McClintic-Marshall concern.

Schlottman said these book entries were incorrect and that when he returns to Bethlehem, Pa., he will have them changed to reflect the "true transaction." He said they had been so entered on instructions of a former Bethlehem official, now dead.

The witness added that the records should have shown the stock as having been held by the parent company all the time and then turned over to Mellon and other McClintic-Marshall stockholders in the reorganization.

As a matter of record, the stock actually was transferred direct from Bethlehem's nominees to the four McClintic-Marshall stockholders.

Prince Cools Heels, Waiting U.S. Permit

By the Associated Press.

El Paso, Tex., April 17.—Prince Surjacawa of the Tibetan nobility, who crossed to Juarez to see Mexico, cooled his heels on the Mexican side today and waited for United States immigration officers to let him reenter.

Immigration inspectors at the Santa Fe bridge said the prince was dressed in rough clothes and that they mistook him for a "tramp."

They said the prince's entry to the United States doubtless was legal but that they decided to check immigration offices at San Francisco for verification.

Hope Abandoned for 7 Buried in Mine Blast

Stellarton, N. S., April 17 (AP).—Battered lunch cans found in the Allan Shaft's 1,500-foot level told rescue crews tonight they were nearing the spot where seven coal miners have been buried for more than 36 hours.

Discovery of the grim reminders of tragedy indicated the searchers were not more than 200 feet from the place where the seven were working when an explosion roared through the old shaft yesterday morning and shut them off from the outside with a great barrier of fallen coal and stone.

As the crews pressed the search, hope was abandoned for the seven. It was believed certain none was still alive.

Freight Rates Of Nation Rise Sharply Today

Roads to Get $85,000,000 in Increased Charges in One Year.

By the Associated Press.

The Nation today will begin paying around $85,000,000 a year in increased railroad freight rates in an effort to tide the harassed carriers over the next 14 months.

Temporary increases in the form of surcharges will go into effect on almost all commodities. The only exceptions are major farm crops, including wheat, corn, barley, rice and live stock and building materials.

The lowest additional charges are 10 cents a ton on iron ore and 3 to 15 cents a ton on coal. The highest is 4 cents per 100 pounds—80 cents a short ton—on binder twine and rosin sizing.

The Interstate Commerce Commission Suspension Board late yesterday declined to suspend the rates on coal and agricultural live stock, despite protests filed after the decision. The bituminious coal rates, meanwhile, were set for argument before a three-judge Federal court at Richmond, Va.

The coal rates were attacked by 180 coal companies operating in Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky.

The increases affect thousands of items, almost all of which reach into every part of the country and every home and result in an increase in rates on shipments from the United States to Canada and Mexico.

Actor's Platypus Rug Held Priceless Curio

New York, April 17 (AP).—A fur rug acquired by a touring actor in Australia 40 years ago was displayed by representatives of the Australian government today as a priceless curio, the only one of its kind in existence.

The rug was made of about 80 skins of the duckbilled platypus, a primitive Australian animal. In recent years it has become extremely rare, and killing it is forbidden.

D. M. Dow, official secretary for Australia in the United States, described the platypus as having webbed feet and a duck's bill, and barking like a dog.

Pal of Hamilton Gives Up in Texas

Ralph Fults Surrenders Meekly to 3 Officers.

By the Associated Press.

Denton, Tex., April 17.—Ralph Fults, fugitive who teamed with Raymond Hamilton in a Mississippi bank robbery recently, threw up his hands today in meek surrender.

The outlaw, whose police record dates back 10 years to when he was 14 years old, tumbled out of his automobile on Millionaires Island at Lake Dallas, east of here, and surrendered to three Denton officers.

"Don't shoot, boys—I'm the man you want and I won't make any trouble," he shouted to the officers, who had chased him to the end of a "blind lane" after spotting him near Denton.

Brought here, the slender, good-looking youth admitted he and Hamilton had looted the Prentiss (Miss.) bank several weeks ago and had split $1,100 in currency.

Mississippi authorities have moved to have him returned there for trial. Hamilton, captured at Fort Worth April 5, is awaiting execution in the Huntsville State prison May 10, for slaying a prison guard.

Navajo Is Found Dead In Indian Love Triangle

Gallup, N. Mex., April 17 (AP).—The bullet-pierced body of Frank Toney, Navajo brave, added the final chapter today to the story of an Indian love triangle.

Toney's body was found—with a pistol nearby—on a hill a quarter of a mile from the home of his love rival.

Toney had abused his wife, Forrest Parker, an Indian service official said, because of too frequent visits with Tom Alex, a neighbor brave. Mrs. Toney put her husband's saddle outside their home, the tribal pronouncement of divorce, and went to Alex.

Child Faints In Last Rites Of Bus Dead

Pastor Calls for Elimination of Grade Crossings for Safety.

Dramatic Prayers Soothe Relatives of Victims at Williamsport.

By Peter Kihss.

A Staff Correspondent.

Williamsport, Md., April 17.—The baritone voice cried out like a trumpet. The High School Auditorium was packed beyond its capacity. This afternoon, a pastor from Hagerstown, the Rev. Dr. Walter Byron Stehl, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, sought to comfort the townsfolk of Williamsport, gathered in community memorial service to honor those 14 young children who perished when a train ground their school bus to splinters last Thursday.

"Out of sorrow comes joy," he cried. "Out of the tomb comes Christ. Hear that triumphant cry, 'I am He who was dead but liveth forever. I am the Resurrection and the Life.'"

Into the earth this morning had passed the last of the dead. Williamsport was seeking to adjust itself to their absence. The shock of the first grief was slowly easing, and the faces of the 800 who crammed themselves into the High School Auditorium and the hundreds who stood on its lawn, unable to enter, were less tense.

Stores All Locked.

The Methodist pastor, Karl G. Newell, said "the rivers of peace are beginning to flow in our desert," and he thanked God.

Outside the streets were deserted. By order of the town council, locks barred all business doors from noon to 5 o'clock.

Everyone who could attend went to the memorial service in the yellow bricked school house there on the green hill just on the edge of town.

Mayor Richard C. Hawken presided. Juniors and seniors of the high school, the bereft classes, sat in the first rows. There, too, was Miss Louise Funk, the teacher who comforted the dying in their last moments. On the platform were the town's leaders, its council, its pastors, the county board of education, school and political leaders from the neighboring towns, 44 altogether. Radio microphones broadcast the hour's ceremony.

The mayor expressed his sympathy. Everyone stood up and sang "Nearer My God to Thee." A pastor from neighboring Downsville, the Rev. C. A. Frick, spoke the invocation.

Messages and resolutions of sympathy were read by former State Senator William D. Byron. There were scores of them from Gov. Nice, the Mayor of Baltimore, the District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers, many schools and fraternal orders. The Hagerstown Elks offered material assistance in the creation of some suitable cenotaph in commemoration of Williamsport's student dead."

Council Sympathetic.

A resolution from the town council extended its sympathy "to the bereaved parents and families of these children to whom we looked forward as our rising generation."

The Rev. William M. Beattie read a psalm, "The Lord is my shepherd," and scripture, "In my Father's house are many mansions."

"We are learning to live in these days of mutual grief," Mr. Newell prayed, "keep us always in these bonds of mutual helpfulness and sympathy."

A choir sang. The tremolo voices were those of Mrs. Charles Reichter, Mrs. W. M. Huddle, Mr. Beattie and William Beard. Then Dr. Stehl, tall, distinguished by black ecclesiastic garb and gray-haired, powerful of voice, added his message. He prayed that the "martyrdom" might "bring the attention of this Government of ours to the necessity of eliminating grade crossings so that we may travel in safety," and he preached the consolation:

Put these children lovingly into the hands of a loving Father. Know that the best for them, the happiest for them, the completest for them, will come true in His hands."

His arms uplifted, the Rev. C. W. Huddle looked at the flock. "May the love of God and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen." The drama was over.

Pall Is Lifting.

The hundreds filed out and a rustle of active voices marked a Williamsport throng for the first time in six days. The pall was beginning to lift.

In the morning the last two victims had been buried—Phoebe Kelley and James Flurie. In the packed United Brethren Church a high school junior, Walter Jordan, fainted while the service was going on for his chum, Jim. Boy Scouts accompanied the body to its Greenlawn grave, and one, Glen Baker, trumpeted taps.

This afternoon, following the services, farmers began again to talk of the necessity for plowing. Elsewhere in surrounding counties steel plows were upending the brown clods.

Business men prepared to open their stores. The pink wreaths of death were gone from house doors. School will reopen Tuesday, after the Easter recess.

Williamsport will renew its life.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Chestertown, Md., April 17.—Legislation requiring all buses carrying passengers to come to a full stop before crossing any railroad intersection in Kent County, was recommended to judges of Kent County Circuit Court today by the grand jury. J. R. Simpers is foreman.

The grand jury received a recommendation from citizens of Massey, Md., requesting that all Pennsylvania Railroad trains stop at the grade crossing west of the railroad station in that town on the Chestertown branch line. This recommendation was presented to the court with the suggestion the railroad be asked to stop its trains.

Where Lafayette Was Guest

Peliso, built about 1800, and the scene of entertainments in honor of Lafayette in 1824, which will be among old Virginia homes open to the public next week.

Madison Mansion to Be Open For Pilgrimages Next Week

Peliso, Where Lafayette Was Entertained, Also to Be on View.

By Elizabeth C. Taylor.

Situated in a county which celebrated its bi-centennial last summer are many fine and well preserved homes of the founders of the United States. Through the interest of the Garden Club of Virginia and the Dolly Madison Garden Club of Orange, Va., many of these homes and gardens will be thrown open to the public next week.

Perhaps the best-known mansion is that of James and Dolly Madison who built the spacious home a few miles from Orange Courthouse in 1756. The house is approached by a drive circling a large lawn. White pillars two stories high flanked by huge box bushels appear against the stucco of the house. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Somerville have added the private race track and steeplechase grounds which lie at the front of the lawn. The box hedges and the general arrangement of the gardens follow the plans said to have been made by Madison and his friends, Jefferson and Barbour.

Montebello Built in 1728.

Just north of Orange is Montebello, home of Mrs. Leslie H. Gray, a former president of the Virginia Garden Club. Built in 1728 on a crown grant from George II, the home is still in the family of its builders. In the Georgian tradition, the house has a wide pillared porch overlooking the rolling country. The walk is deeply hedged with box and the gardens are among the best preserved in Virginia.

Other old homes and gardens which will be on exhibition are Frascati, a few miles north of Gordonsville and Barboursville, home of Phillip Pendleton Barbour, Governor of Virginia at the time Madison was President. Barboursville, the original mansion house, burned, but the beautiful box remains together with the outbuildings and slave quarters.

Lafayette Feted at Peliso.

High on a hill overlooking the town of Orange is Peliso, built about 1800 and restored by its present owner, Mrs. W. W. Harper. Entering the house from a wide porch one comes into a hall running parallel to the front wall of the house. Branching off from either end of the hall are two wings believed to have been added several years after the main house was built. It was here that a ball was given in honor of Lafayette on his visit to this country in 1824. To the left of the house is a garden containing almost every variety of flower grown as a border along the walks leading around the grass plot in the center. Near the flower borders is a more formal garden sedate with old box hedge.

In the Orange district are many more modern gardens on display as well as the old-fashioned ones. Iverness, home of Mr. and Mrs. Barton H. Cameron, displays a terraced hillside garden as well as pine, dogwood and iris. An interesting formal garden may be seen at Waverley, home of Mr. and Mrs. James N. Andrews. One mile west of Orange is Williston, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Byrd Willis. The house is about 75 years old and the garden was planned by the owners, William and Mary Cottage, on Marshall Heights, is the home of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Browning. The garden, while modern, has an old-fashioned atmosphere.

Garden Clubs Meet in Norfolk On May 2 and 3

Convention of Federation to Mark Close of Revised Fiscal Year.

By the Associated Press.

Norfolk, Va., April 17.—The third annual meeting of the Virginia Federation of Garden Clubs will be held here May 2 and 3.

Announcement of the choice of Norfolk as the convention city was made today by Mrs. J. L. Weller, president of the Norfolk Federation of Garden Clubs. The Norfolk federation will be the hostess federation.

The Norfolk meeting will bring to a close a short fiscal year for the State federation. The year was made short by a change in the constitution at the 1934 annual meeting in Richmond last October, when it was decided that since gardening in Virginia is generally conceded to be at its height in the spring, the annual meeting should be held at that season of the year. The original provision of the State constitution was changed accordingly.

Decline Seen In Maryland Wheat Yield

Federal Estimates Set 6,912,000 Bushels as 1935 Output.

By the Associated Press.

Maryland's 1935 wheat crop will be about 6,912,000 bushels as compared with 7,934,000 a year ago, estimates prepared by the University of Maryland Extension Service and the United States Department of Agriculture show.

Not only does the 1935 estimate represent a reduction from the 1934 total, it compares with the 8,648,000-bushel average for the five-year period from 1928 through 1932. Stocks of wheat on farms April 1 this year, however, are estimated at 952,000 bushels as compared with 822,000 for the like date a year ago.

The crop survey reports as of April 1 showed that the condition of winter wheat in Maryland is 8 per cent above average, but field work has been delayed by an unusual number of rainy days. The condition this year is fixed at 89 per cent, as compared with 71 per cent for 1934 and 82 per cent for the five-year period.

The April 1 condition of rye was fixed as 91 per cent, as compared with 84 per cent for the five-year period and 74 per cent for last year.

Pasture conditions were 84 per cent. Those for April 1, 1934, were only 64 per cent and the figure for the five-year period was 77 per cent.

The farm carryover of corn was estimated at 6,625,000 bushels, which compares with 5,731,000 in 1934, 5,202,000 in 1933 and 9,884,000 in 1932. Oat stocks at 449,000 bushels were about average.

Mass of Legislation Awaits Governor's Action.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., April 17.—Gov. Harry W. Nice, after a two-days' vacation, in which he attended the opening of the International League baseball season in Baltimore today, and the National League inaugural between the New York Giants and Boston Braves in New York yesterday, returned to the executive mansion tonight ready to resume consideration of the mass of bills passed by the recent session of the General Assembly.

The Governor indicated that he may dispose of a few bills tomorrow and a big batch probably on Friday and Saturday. In the meantime he has planned conferences with Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, and others who were numbered among his advisers during the legislative session.

In the absence of the Governor considerable mail has accumulated on his desk, much of which, it is said, is made up of petitions and letters for and against the teachers' oath bill, and the Chesapeake Bay bridge, the pair of measures that have been the source of the greatest controversy since the assembly session closed.

Request Is Sent For Extradition In Well Murder

Peery Signs Requisition to Lehman for John Shell, Indicted.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 17.—Gov. Peery today signed a requisition for the extradition from New York of John Shell, colored, to face trial in Spotsylvania County for the murder of John Thomas Coleman and his wife, whose bodies were found in a well.

The requisition, addressed to Gov. Lehman of New York, was mailed immediately.

Meanwhile Shell, named yesterday by Joe Jackson, another Negro, as the murderer of the Colemans, was reported as prepared to fight extradition to Virginia.

Jackson was held in Henrico County Jail here as the State sought the return of Shell from Haverstraw, N. Y.

Both Negroes were indicted on several counts by a grand jury in Fredericksburg, Va., yesterday.

Jackson admitted complicity in the double killing, but said he was not present when the aged couple were beaten, shot, robbed and their bodies dropped down a 40-foot well. Instead, he insisted, he was waiting some distance away. He accused Shell of the actual killings and entered a plea of not guilty.

Winchester Apples Safe From Cold

Records Recall Freakish Weather in Orchard Section in 1928.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., April 17.—That apple orchards in the Winchester district withstood the severe cold of the last three days was the welcome news broadcast to fruit growers today by W. S. Hough, entomologist at the Winchester Research Laboratory.

After a check of orchards, Mr. Hough announced that only slight damage had been done and that it was limited to orchards with defective drainage.

He reviewed his records and found similar conditions in April, 1928, when low temperatures were followed by more than a foot of snow while the trees were in bloom. That year the apple harvest aggregated 2,600,000 bushels in Frederick County and there was a large crop of peaches.

Much Harm Reported To Virginia Peaches

By the Associated Press.

Henry M. Taylor, agricultural statistician at Richmond, Va., notified the Agriculture Department that frost and freezing weather Monday and Tuesday nights caused considerable damage to fruit crops in that area.

In the region west of the Blue Ridge Mountains, Taylor said, peaches have been killed. Only slight damage resulted east of the Blue Ridge and a good crop is promised.

Some injury to apples was reported south of Albemarle, but buds in the Shenandoah Valley and north Albemarle were not sufficiently opened to be injured. Apple prospects were reported favorable.

Maryland, as a whole, came through this week's unseasonal weather with comparatively little crop damage, reports from all sections of the State indicate.

In western Maryland, growers estimated that 20 per cent of the 1935 peach crop was killed by the freeze of Monday night and Tuesday. The apple crop, it was felt, however, came through with little or no damage.

Heavy rains on the Eastern Shore for ten days or more had delayed the planting of early potatoes and peas and planting was not begun until Wednesday. Apple trees on the Shore had not bloomed before the freeze and consequently suffered no damage.

High winds prevented frost during the first two days of the week and peach blossoms were not damaged on that score, despite the freezing weather.

Despite the high winds, there was no property damage on the Eastern Shore.

Crop Injury Feared In Waynesboro Area

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., April 17.—Orchardists in this section today surveyed the damage caused by two days of sub-freezing temperatures. A west wind carried hopes for safety of the peach crop yesterday, although some of the buds were frozen by temperatures which dropped to 22 degrees above zero.

This morning, the second day of freezing weather, brought renewed fear that the crop was hurt.

Growers felt, however, that most of the peaches had not advanced to the stage where freezing could hurt them.

Collegians to Pass on New Election Plans

By the Associated Press.

Charlottesville, Va., April 17.—Students of the University of Virginia will vote tomorrow on a new system of electing their officers, who previously have been nominated by two social fraternities on the campus.

The honor committee yesterday broke precedents when they heeded charges of fraud made when practically all nominees were found to be outstanding athletes, and ordered an alternative system of nominations to be voted on by the students. The proposed plan would provide for nomination by the student assembly.

Cost Increase Of Two-Thirds In VERA Seen

Increased Personnel, More Cases Make Expense for April Greater.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 17.—An increase of 66 2-3 per cent in the cost of administering relief in Virginia during April was forecast here yesterday by officers of the Virginia emergency relief administration.

The April cost figure, $169,545, represents a heavy advance over the February cost of $101,676. March figures were not available but they were believed by the VERA to be not greatly over those for February.

In announcing the probable increase the VERA said it was in part due to recent employment of additional personnel in the subsistence garden and rural rehabilitation work. In addition approximately 50 additional case workers have been employed by the social service division in the last 60 days. Further staff increases are expected, the administration said.

In January the organization listed 1,484 administrative employes. In February the number had risen to 1,580. By the end of April it is expected that there will be close to 2,000.

Administrative costs have kept step with staff increases. In January they totaled $102,914; in February, $101,676, and in April (estimated), $190,545.

A heavy increase in the case load is also looked for by the administration. Again March figures are lacking, but in January the case figures showed 46,960 cases; in February there were 48,034, while the April figure is expected to reach 50,000.

U. S. Court Denies Coal Freight Plea

Operators Given Ten Days to File New Brief.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 17.—Three judges in Federal District Court late today declined to interfere with emergency freight surcharges which the railroads will put into effect at midnight as authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The court denied a petition for a temporary injunction against the increases after hearing argument by counsel for 180 coal mining companies in the Appalachian area, who sought the restraining order, and attorneys for the I. C. C., the United States and the railroads.

Counsel for the plaintiffs were given 10 days in which to file a further brief, and the defendants' attorneys were granted an additional 10 days to file their brief. The plaintiffs may file an answering brief in another five days if they desire.

J. Stanley Payne, assistant counsel for the I. C. C., who presented most of the argument for the defendants, contended the coal operators had no legal standing in court and that their remedy lay in a complaint to the commission that the 15-cents-a-ton surcharge on bituminous coal was found to be burdensome and unreasonable after a period of trial.

J. Van Norman, chief counsel for the mine operators, replied that for his clients to apply for redress to the I. C. C., which authorized the increases, would be to leave them without hope.

Payne, R. V. Fletcher, vice president and general counsel of the Association of American Railroads, and Elmer Collins, assistant to the solicitor general of the United States, maintained that an injunction would "create turmoil" in the administration of rates by the I. C. C., particularly the temporary increases effective from tomorrow to June 30, 1936, under a decision of the commission in March.

Forensic Officers Report.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., April 17.—A check-up by the finance committee today revealed a $1 deficit at the fifth annual meeting of the Southern Pennsylvania Forensic and Music League here Saturday. Receipts and expenses tallied $164 and $165, respectively.

Building Activity Resumes After Almost a Decade of Quiescence in Movie Game

Millions to Be Expended Here In Betterment

New Construction On Way; The Jolsons Register; Amusement Notes.

(Restricted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

After a protracted period of quietus, dating back even prior to the depression year of 1929, the theater building trade in the Washington territory is to experience something in the nature of a renaissance.

I do not mean to say that a swarm of new motion-picture and so-called legitimate houses are immediately to be erected, but I have it on good authority that practically all of the Washington chain theater enterprises are going in for refurbishmane, rehabilitation, expansion and the like in a big way and that in outlying sections a few new projects are not only in contemplation but in a fair way to achieve early consummation.

It is no part of my present privilege to reveal the extent to which circuit theaters are to be rejuvenated—there is still something more than a scrap of wordage about a gentlemen's agreement.

But I am able to say that there is a strong likelihood that a sum in excess of $1,000,000 will be expended in the ashington territory in a well-conceived and carefully planned campaign of property development.

If I am wrong, write to me about it after the improvements have not been made!

A New Project.

Then there is the entirely new building project fostered by Sidney B. Lust, foremost of the Capital's independent producers, who operates a chain of theaters in and around Washington—the Hippodrome and Leader in town and two or three Arcades, Richmonds and Cameos outside.

Mr. Lust has organized a stock company that is about to erect a new motion picture playhouse for the thriving community of Rockville, Md. Mr. Lust, heretofore, has been operating the Arcade in Rockville. That temple of the titillating tintypes now is closed, pending the eventuation of the new Milo Theater which will take its place.

The Milo will be a theater with a total capacity of 700 seats—upholstered seats, Mr. Lust insists—divided between an orchestra floor and balcony.

The architect is an experienced theater designer whose participation in the enterprise guarantees its architectural and engineering integrity.

John Zink is the gentleman's name. Mr. Zink, it may, or may not, be recalled, was the architect who designed and built the Rialto Theater in this city, rebuilt the Metropolitan, Lincoln and other of the local houses in 1922 and since has gone on to greater fame as an associate in proficiency in playhouse design with Thomas B. Lamb, who designed and built the Palace, Tivoli, Ambassador and others of the foremost of the local edifices dedicated to the celluloid drama.

A feature of the new Milo in Rockville will be an ample parking lot in the rear of the theater where adequate space will do away with the usual worries of those who have no idea what to do with their cars while watching a movie.

Dr. Gibbs Carries On.

The promotional possibilities of the new enterprise have not been overlooked, either. On one side of the theater will be a Peoples drug store and on the other a Sanitary Grocery.

Check back and see how this parallels the development of theater properties in Washington. There never was a Crandall theater—they are now the Warner houses—that was not abutted, or as nearly as might be, by a Peoples drug store. Recite the list of Warner Theaters over in your mind and try and find one that has not a Peoples drug store across the street or adjacent. It can't be done.

That is the way Dr. Gibbs, president of Peoples acted, and that, apparently, is the way he still does.

The new Milo Theater in Rockville is expected to be ready for formal opening not later than August 1, of the present year.

None of these developments, incidentally, marking a new upturn in the theater building trade, is being financed by any governmental agency. The motion picture industry is paying its way as it goes.

Perhaps I was wrong. It has happened. I mean I seem to recollect having said in this space that Herb Cook and "His Three Little Words"—which I still deem a terrible title for any act intended to convey the idea of personality — would work from the orchestra pit of the Earle when they begin their extended engagement on Thirteenth street on Friday, just as Bert Granoff had done for a year. They are to do no such thing. While they will be featured in a special overture that Freddie Clark has prepared, they will appear—accompanied by Herb Cook, their manager, composer and arranger—on the stage as a full-fledged act. More about these talented kids will follow shortly—or maybe longly. Just a little farther along. Or have you already guessed it?

The Jolsons' Click.

When a lot of us sat around his suite in the Shoreham last June when Al Jolson came down to co-umpire the congressional baseball game, between the Democrats and Republicans, with Gene Tunney, the most outstanding impression that he conveyed to his guests was his complete devotion to Ruby Keeler, the charming young woman who is his wife.

I have known them both for a good many years now, and all I can say is that "Go Into Your Dance," the film play in which they appear together for the first time—which was handsomely prescreened by Johnny Payette and the other Warner executives Monday night for the especial benefit of the dramatic desks—betrays more than any other tangible evidence that has ever come to the cinema's deceptive spotlights, the degree of favor in which these gifted stars of the gelatin drama view themselves.

They play together with the greatest happiness, harmony and unhampered freedom. They are an ace combination, destined, I dare say, to score a new "high" in audience appraisal when "Go Into Your Dance" is formally dedicated to public fancy on Friday of the current week at the Earle.

Backstage Night Club Story.

The story of "Go Into Your Dance" is a backstage yarn that deals with night clubs more than it does with theaters. The formula is stereotyped. But it is given a new tang by the sheer appeal that can be created by such experts at pretending as the Jolsons, Patsy Kelly, Glenda Farrell and the numerous others who enter into the slightly involved fable of a couple of troupers who didn't find themselves until it was almost too late.

Jolson has a bundle of songs to sing and there is no need here to expostulate upon the superlative manner in which he sings them. Ruby also has a bundle of orders to deliver and of her I would not be too sure.

I mean, only, that Ruby, first and last, is a tap dancer. In this picture they attempt to expand her into a combination of Adeline Genee, Pavlova, Isadora Duncan, Eleanor Powell and Harriet Hoctor.

The result is not too happy. Ruby, as a tap dancer, has a paucity of competitors who can be counted on the fingers of one hand; as an international danseuse, capable of globe-encircling interpretation of the art of Terpsichore, you can count her active competitors on the fingers of more hands than there are in town!

This, however, is not belittling the extremely diverting performances contributed to a lively motion picture by two of the foremost stars of the day.

Support Also Scores.

And not only are they good, but Glenda Farrell has the best chance she has had in many moons to demonstrate the far reaches of her caustic humor, and Patsy Kelly, who was with Jolson as far back as his stage production of "Wonder Bar"—which he owned and cashed in on, on both stage and screen—is once more afforded an outlet for probably the most rowdy and ingratiating abilities to be seen on the screen today.

Some of the song sequences in this picture—which was directed by Archie Mayo, and not by Busby Berkeley—will contribute a new point of view to those who think that everything that can be done already has been done in the staging and filming of new ideas in spectacular cinematic splendor.

There are a few song sequences in "Go Into Your Dance" that may be relied upon for new perspectives and new thrills.

This is one of the pictures this department would advise you not to permit yourself to miss.

Nothing but bad luck dogs this department. Take, for example, the note I find on my desk from Ann Grosvenor Ayres. Ann, it appears, has been in town for days, visiting Frances Reynolds, daughter of Senator Reynolds, and what happens? Just as when the Fred Stones were in town in "Jayhawker," I am out at every important hour—each one being the one during which Ann parks herself near my desk in an inexplicable hope that sometime I may drop in. It is a lamentable situation—especially so for the theater, because Ann confides that she probably will not indulge in the luxury of another summer season in the "barn" theater as she has done for the past three years. "Too hard work and nothing gained, so far as I could see, from three of them," says Ann. She was pretty much interested in "On to Fortune," in which Roy Atwell was arrogated to a fictitious stardom, and which turned out to be one of the National Theater's lesser claims to a season of distinction. Miss Ayres is a discerning disciple of the theater whose perceptive endowments will be missed if she really insists upon her present apparent determination to let the theater take care of itself. The theater never will do that. It needs a few Ann Grosvenor Ayres to help it along.

"Three Little Maids From School."

And now we come to the major matter of those hopelessly misnamed "Three Little Words."

Here are three kids—and they are nothing more than that—celebrated in this column no longer ago than Monday, who really "have something," as the saying goes.

Herb Cook, pianist, composer and arranger—who was persistently referred to as "Fred" day before yesterday, through misleading suggestion of erroneous advance "copy"—may be the mainspring of this act, but, so far as the paying public is concerned, Joan Jarrett, Frances Joy and Beth Raborn, the three youthful harmonists, whose perfectly blended vocalisms might well cause the Pickens Sisters, the Three X Sisters and several others that might be mentioned some concern, will be applauded specialists whose endeavors will be most assertive in any attack on public response the act may hope to make.

The principal assets of these three girls—and the back of my hand to you, Mr. Cook, swell pianist and arranger that you are—is the rare combination of youth, enthusiasm and comeliness which they present.

Following the preview of "Go Into Your Dance" Monday night, they sang for hours on end with an ebullience, a verve and an indefatigable good humor that could bespeak nothing but a colossal individual consciousness of the fun of what they were doing.

When "putting on an act" becomes as much fun to those who are putting it on as to those for whom it is being put on, then that act is more apt than not to write itself down as one of those spontaneous things that automatically register themselvse in the "hit" column of mass appreciation.

That is what I think is going to happen when Herb Cook and "His Three Little Words"—and that is certainly the world's worst title—make their bow at the Earle on Friday.

These kids are too good not to "get over" with a public that has applauded similar trios already named in these dispatches.

I hope I am not mistaken. For your information, in the back of my mind—as I still playfully call it—I am sure I am not.

Is on the Way to Screen Stardom

This young Fox film contract player is Astrid Allwyn, whose approximately perfect facial contour and marked histrionic ability have launched her on the road to stardom. The blonde Miss Allwyn, who bears a striking resemblance to the youthful actress, who is the daughter of Nina Koshett, the Russian prima donna, whose voice has doubled for so many ostensibly singing film stars—including Elissa Landi in "Enter Madame"—is to be seen next on the screen in "It's a Small World," an observation to which this department often has subscribed.

Platinum blondes, attention! Jean Harlow, the world's most famous silver-thatched beauty, has just had a rose named after her by the leading American florists. Gude, the Washington horticulturist, whose establishment on F street is nationally known, in cooperation with Loew's Palace Theater, where Jean opens Friday, as costar with William Powell in "Reckless," will present one of these newly grafted, beautifully large and fragrant roses to each of the first 12 platinum blondes, or near-platinums, attending the Palace on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

There will, to make the matter plain, be an even dozen of these new roses presented to the first platinums entering the Palace on the three days mentioned.

Hurry up with that peroxide!

Another Groundhog Note.

Did that blizzard come up yesterday afternoon to blast that ball game or did that blizzard come up yesterday afternoon to blast that ball game?

Charlottesville Offers State Land for Park

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., April 17.—Seventeen acres of land at the old Moores Creek pumping station would be deeded to the State by the city for a wayside park by an action of the city council last night. The State has yet to accept the terms of the deed. The city would reserve the right to resume ownership should the paark not be maintained according to national park standards.

The Federal Government would furnish funds to improve the property, and the State maintain it. The newly acquired property would be added to the tract now owned by the State to give a park area of 40 or more acres.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Movie Boners.

Hollywood, April 17.

RECENTLY, the script girls having talked things over, have decided to be very careful and are on the lookout for what they have dubbed "Skolsky shots." They intend to put this particular column, Movie Boners, out of business. The gals will have to do better. Here we are doing business at the same old stand, and with so many flicker flaws that we can't list them all in this space. Starting with the new pictures, there is Paul Muni in "Black Fury." H. B. Silversmith objects to the sequences in which Muni is counting his money. He says 73, then counts about eight more bills and says 76. Even if they were all one dollar bills, he'd have to do some tricky figuring to have that amount. The long count of the Dempsey-Tunney battle is nothing to the short count that Paul Muni gives himself.

Rudy Vallee in the cafe sequence of "Sweet Music" is seen and heard singing "Every Day" and "Sweet," and during the singing of these two ditties he is accompanied by the Brittons' band. But, writes Don Lewis, when Rudy introduces Ann Dvorak, and she starts to dance, there is another band playing. Immediately following this dance, the Brittons and their band are seen leaving the stand. It's a nice bit of movie magic. What really happened is that Miss Dvorak recorded her dance after the Brittons had left Hollywood; another orchestra was employed to play for her, and then the film shot when the Brittons played for Rudy was used to complete the scene.

• • • •

THERE are several flicker flaws noted by the moviegoers in "Roberta," and judging from the amount of letters this picture is certainly drawing them at the box office. Nathan Ness writes that the lovers, Randolph Scott and Irene Dunne, not wishing to be different, have the usual lovers' quarrel. Then there is the big fashion show, and Randy Scott puts in an appearance at his gown shop and is wearing a necktie with the yellow—at least, without the aid of technicolor, it appears to be yellow—predominant in the knot and upper portion. He learns that Irene Dunne is leaving town, so he immediately runs after her. The lovers must make up, you know. But when Scott leaves the room in which the fashion parade is on the march, the color of his necktie has changed; he is even wearing it differently. This is certainly a boner that the script girl let get by.

• • • •

Continuing with "Roberta," William Weiner refers to the sequence in which the elevator in the dress shop is stuck between floors. Randy Scott is in the elevator. Irene Dunne calls out to her cousin, the former Russian prince and now the doorman, to do something about it. He does this about it: He pushes the lower button—or the "down" button—and the elevator rises.

• • • •

WILLIAM GARGAN, in "Traveling Saleslady," reaches for some cardboard advertisements from a file case, and in the closeup of his hand picking them up there is a cigarette between his fingers. Yet, writes Mrs. W. F. Sterling, in the next flash, Gargan tears the advertisements, throws them into the wastepaper basket, and there isn't a cigarette visible. Gargan isn't seen smoking it, holding it, or throwing it away. He did a Fred Keating with the ciggie.

Another trick occurs in "After Office Hours," according to Maurice Lepesqueur. Clark Gable, the newspaper editor, is in his office reading copy. He reads the story which Constance Bennett wrote the previous night, after she attended a theatrical performance. Gable is disgusted, crumples the copy up, and throws it on his desk. Yet, when Miss Bennett comes in, about two minutes later, he picks up the story and the paper is now neat and uncrumpled. Those handsome movie heroes can do practically anything.

• • • •

In "The Little Colonel," Lionel Barrymore is in Shirley Temple's bedroom while she is asleep. He notices her shoes, picks one up and it is plainly seen that there is a hole in the shoe. It is also plainly evident, claims H. L. Bonnie Borzos, that the property man carefully made the hole in Shirley's shoe, for the other part of the sole looks new and shiny. They have to do things better than that to get by with the Movie Boners' Club.

Ray Milland in "The Gilded Lily" is a wealthy Englishman, traveling incognito in New York. But even so, writes Dave Shapiro, you'd expect him to ride in a taxi, at least, not to mention his own car. Instead, Mr. Milland rides in the subway. How come? But if he didn't he wouldn't meet Claudette Colbert, and then where's the picture? And the challenge to name a picture without a flicker flaw still goes unanswered.

son and the A's only runs of the ball game.

As advertised, President Roosevelt threw out the first ball. Rolling into the stadium at the head of a fleet of six White House automobiles, the President took his seat abaft the Nats' dugout to the strains of the National Anthem, posed with various baseball officials, submitted to a host of photographers, and threw the first knuckle ball of the season.

The Presidential pitch toward the eager, grasping group of players assembled in front of his box was a high lob and the well-known Presidential smile wreathed his features as Bobby Burke, aided by his 6 feet 2 inches, caught the ball in a wild melee which saw Joe Kuhel knocked down and a half dozen other players trampled.

The ball will grace the Burke homestead in Joliet, Ill., as a memento of the occasion.

Nationals Are Outhit.

The Nats were outhit yesterday, 10 to 8, but in the important matter of run-making the Athletics lagged. Not until the eighth, when Foxx contributed his home run, did they penetrate the service of Whitehill. The Athletics were laboring under a 4-to-0 disadvantage for seven innings, despite their frequent hits.

In contrast to the flawless fielding of the Nats, the Athletics were guilty of two errors, both of which figured in the scoring and which, in recapitulation, provided the Nats with their winning margin. The guilty parties were Bob Johnson and Wallace Moses, butter-fingered outfielders on ground balls yesterday.

In the first inning, Cain was not able to halt the Nats until the ball game had been won, as later events proved. Buddy Myer launched the uprising by coaxing a base on balls and Manush advanced him to second with a looping single into center field that Second Baseman Williams dropped after shooing a pair of outfielders away from the play.

Stone's Drive Scores First Run.

Stone came home with the third run of the inning when Joe Kuhel, another left-hander in the Nats' batting order, dropped a single into left field.

The Nats came back for more in the second inning and got one more. The run was inspired by Jake Powell's base on balls and sealed by Moses' error on Buddy Myer's single to the outfield. Powell advanced to second base on the blow and when he noted that Moses had permitted the ball to carom off his knee and roll to the right field fence, he raced all the way home while Myer dashed to third.

Thus the Nats had their 4-0 lead, but it had required a rare good play by Catcher Cliff Bolton and Capt. Myer to turn back the Athletics runless in that first inning.

Alex Hook's, the A's first baseman, celebrated his big league debut by bouncing a short single over Cecil Travis' head on Whitehill's first pitch of the game. Joe Kuhel eased the situation when he took Cramer's sharp bouncer and threw to Lary at second for a forceout on Hooks, but it became ominous again a moment later when young Moses, in his first big league appearance, rapped a single through the box to advance Cramer to third.

Double Steal Frustrated.

At this point, Jimmy Foxx appeared at the plate and the A's could ask no more. Whitehill worked the count to three and two on Foxx and then struck him out on a sweeping curve. But Moses was running on the pitch and an attempt at a double steal developed. Bolton and Lary nipped it cleanly. As Cramer dashed from third, Lary returned Bolton's perfect throw from second with a perfect throw of his own to the plate and Cramer was out by six feet on a double play. At least, so Bolton discovered after picking himself up from the dust whence the barging Cramer had knocked him.

Cain steadied after that second inning and permitted the Nats only one more hit until he was withdrawn for a pinch-hitter in the seventh, but with each rise and dip of Whitehill's left arm the Nats appeared to be nearing a shutout victory.

Whitehill scattered hits over the first, second, fourth, fifth and sixth innings without damage, although he was obviously tiring in his first nine-inning effort. In the sixth he met his severest test, when a hit by Hooks and walks to Johnson and Foxx filled the bases with two out, but at this point Cecil Travis came through with a clever stop of McNair's sharp grounder to terminate the threat.

Whitehill survived the seventh despite a walk to Warstler and Pinch Hitter Frank Higgins' single to center, but in the eighth the A's bit the hand that had been teasing 'em.

After Foxx's homer had dropped into the bleachers to score two runs for the A's in the eighth, Manager Bucky Harris tolerated Whitehill only until Johnson followed with a single to left field with none out as yet. Then he motioned Whitehill out of the box and the left-hander departed the scene to the applause of the 21,000, including President Roosevelt.

Jack Russell was the relief choice of Harris and Eric McNair saluted the right-hander with his third hit of the day, advancing Johnson to second, but again Cecil Travis came to the rescue of a Washington pitcher.

Double Play Cuts Rally.

Dib Williams zapped a smoking grounder toward left field and the cat-like Travis was on it in a flash, throwing to Myer at second with the same motion in which he smared the ball and watching Myer relay it to Kuhel at first for a lightning double play.

Against Russell in the ninth, the

The play that dashed the A's hopes in the first inning. Roger Cramer is seen dashing home from third base in a futile attempt to score on a double steal. Moses raced for second on the pitch and after Bolton's throw to Myer, Cramer attempted to score, but the return throw to the plate nipped him for a double play.

Hadley Will Face A's In Second Duel Today

2,000 Bleacherites on Hand at 9 A. M., But Are Outnumbered by Photographers; Natty Nats Scoop Summer Time.

TO BUMP HADLEY, the prodigal son returned home after a term with St. Louis, will be entrusted the task of making it two in a row over the A's for Washington this afternoon in the second game of the series. A winning pitcher with the Browns last season despite the lowly estate of that club, Hadley looms as the key man in the Nationals' 1935 pennant hopes. His arm, which went bad during the training season, is normal again, and Trainer Mike Martin has pronounced Bump ready for the question.

Griffith Stadium officials had advertised that the gates would be open at 9 a. m. and 2,000 bleacherites took them at their word. They scrambled into the choice seats in the concrete stands in center field and their tribe increased to 5,000 before game time. Among the things they didn't fear was sunstroke.

Two hours before game time there was one photographer in the park for every two fans in the grandstand.

Bucky Harris and Jimmy Foxx posed for 10 minutes in the President's box and thought they were being photographed. Ninety-five per cent of the cameramen were merely using them to focus their gadgets for the time when the President would arrive.

The Nats, in their new uniforms, scooped summer time by a couple of months. They were in the traditional white flannel of the home team. They also changed their socks for the occasion. The white, gray and red of their hose was displaced by white, red and black.

Goldman's band, which entertained the early fans, was shooed off the field during the infield practice and the United States Army band paraded onto the premises to the tune of "Suwannee River."

In batting practice, the Athletics proved themselves the best 2 o'clock ball team in either league. Bob Johnson hit three consecutive home runs into the left-field bleachers. The pitching of one Vernon Wilshire and a tremendous tail wind had something to do with them.

Scheduled for a 2:45 arrival, the President was seven minutes early. As the 25,000 in the park stood bareheaded, the President took his seat to the strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Baseball makes strange bedfellows. Among the first to greet the President was William Richards, a native Philadelphian, who is vice president of the Washington club.

In the presidential party, besides the Chief Executive, were Postmaster General James A. Farley, the White House secretaries, Stephen Early and Marvin McIntyre; the latter's son, Kennedy McIntyre; Col. Edwin M. Watson, military aid; Capt. Wilson Brown, naval aid, and Dr. Ross McIntyre, White House physician.

In a near-by box were grouped Vice President John N. Garner, Senator Joseph T. Robinson, majority leader, and Senator Charles McNary, Republican leader of the Senate.

Miller's Single Helps Red Sox Beat Yanks

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 17.—The Red Sox came through with a pair of last-ditch rallies today to score their second straight triumph over the Yankees, 4 to 3, in a ten-inning battle.

Max Bishop clouted a home run with Pinch Hitter Roy Johnson on base to tie the count at 2-2 in the ninth and another pinch swatter, Bing Miller, came through with a tenth-inning single with runners on second and third to supply the winning run just before Lou Gehrig belted his first homer of the season.

Gehrig's blow came off Henry Johnson's delivery with two out and the bases empty in the last half of the tenth.

Landis Orders Griffith to End 25-Cent Rate for Youngsters

THE Washington ball club's custom of charging reduced admission rates of 25 cents to youths under 14 years of age will be discontinued starting today, on order of Kenesaw Landis, high commissioner of baseball.

For two years, Clark Griffith, owner of the Nats, had permitted the youths to sit in the 55-cent bleacher seats at the reduced rates.

Landis called to Griffith's attention the admission prices of 50 cents, 75 cents and $1, stipulated in the major leagues' agreement.

Protests believed to have been made by the Boston and St. Louis clubs led to Landis' action against the Washington club owner. Before the season started, the Red Sox officials protested the Boston Braves' attempt to sell books containing season tickets at reduced rates, and rigid enforcement of admission price agreements throughout both leagues has resulted.

Griffith last night declared he regretted exceedingly the action of Landis.

"I knew the commissioner would order the Washington club to discotinue the low rates for school-children when the Boston clubs became entangled in their rate war. Consequently, I asked for a vote on a resolution to permit all clubs in the league to reduce the price to 25 cents for children.

"Landis put the resolution to a vote and informed me today that it had been defeated.

"But I am not through with the matter yet. Before long I am going to ask for another vote on the resolution and I feel confident that we can make exceptions at least for children 12 or under."

Rally by Reds Tops Pirates By 7 to 4

By the Associated Press.

PITTSBURGH, April 17.—The Cincinnati Reds rang in the baseball season in the steel city today with a series of base hits in the closing innings that wiped out the Pirates' early lead and gave the invaders a 7-to-4 triumph. Approximately 10,000 cold-weather fans shivered through the opening day encounter.

Guy Bush, former Cub pitcher, making his Pittsburgh bow, turned the Reds back with only one hit in the first five innings, but Chick Hafey batted out a triple in the sixth that sent in two runs.

Chisox Subdue Tigers, 7 to 6; Bonura Stars

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, April 17.—Schoolboy Rowe, accepting a chilly opening-day mound assignment, met a red-hot reception as Zeke Bonura led the Chicago White Sox on a wild hitting spree to set the champion Tigers down, 7 to 6.

Bonura led a ten-hit rampage against the Schoolboy with two doubles and a single. Vernon Washington, Indianapolis rookie, making his first appearance in right field for Chicago, followed Zeke with two hits, both singles, but they both counted for runs.

"Goose" Goslin, displaying mid-season batting form, almost pulled the Schoolboy out of the hole as he lashed out a single, a double and a home run to account for five of Detroit's six runs.

"Sad Sam" Jones, who invariably proves to be a problem to the Tigers, started for the White Sox and yielded but one hit in the first three innings. The chill got into his arm in the fourth, however, and Greenberg nicked him for a single, to be brought home standing up by the Goose's blasting double. Detroit tied the score in the sixth at four-all, when Goslin got his homer with two on base.

Charles P. Navin, secretary of the Tigers, said the paid attendance for the opening game was 24,000.

Aegis Beats Leana G., 35-1 Shot, by Head at Havre de Grace

Peters Rides Veteran to Victory

Rival's Late Bid Futile; Witan Finishes Third; 7,500 Look On.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

HAVRE DE GRACE RACE TRACK, Md., April 17.—The boys in the press box went into a huddle here this afternoon and decided that the fourth race was the feature of the ordinary card of claiming events.

Thus Aegis, an ancient campaigner, gets his name in the headlines along the East Coast. The veteran certainly earned a write-up by sticking tediously to his guns in the closing strides to gain a head decision over Leana G., a 35-to-1 shot, which developed a stretch rush. Another half a length away was Witan.

Aegis has been in more barns in his seven years on this globe than the man who delivers the hay and oats and is now racing for the Ascot Stable, owned by one A. L. Aste. He carried 120 pounds and, with the exception of Feudal Lord, spotted lead to his rivals. "Mouse" Peters did the riding excellently.

A bright sun and a brisk northwest wind greeted the 7,500 who parked their cars or walked up from the train, wishing there was a daily double to add to the day's excitement.

Aegis, the first winning favorite of the afternoon, was not long in going to the front. He bounded out the gate at the 6-furlong chute and it was a case of "catch me if you can."

Witan tried it and fell back. But Leana G. was to be dealt with in the stretch. Jockey Joe Renick probably was so surprised at the speed shown by the filly that he steered into trouble and it was only when she was straightened out that she had a chance.

Going to the wire, Leana G. was making two bounds to Aegis' one, but too late to change the result. She was a $21.90 mutuel, to place, while Aegis paid $5.40.

Dream Kiss Pays $38.40.

Dream Kiss, out of the mare Sugar Kiss, gave the favorite players a jolt in the opening event by leading a frisky field of maiden juveniles to the wire to pay a $38.40 mutuel. In fact, long shots filled the money circle as Lady Westwick finished a half length off the winner and Small Devil passed the wire two lengths away. Gilt, the Vandesbilt stable filly and favorite, was nowhere in particular. Jockey J. Lynch had the winning mount.

Sonny Workman, booted Protractor home in front in the second race over the sprint course. True Charm was second and Clear Knight third as a field of 14 accepted the issue. Romola, the public choice, lacked early speed and was not a contender. Clear Knight and Bobby Buxton set the pace along the backstretch but the race was over when Workman brought Protractor up on the turn into the stretch. The winner was an $8.10 mutuel.

Prince Pays $6.30.

Prince Drake took up to weight and won the third race, another sprint, from Immune and Sun Clothing. Handled by Bobby Watson, Prince Drake was held off the pace set by Immune until the stretch was reached. Immune went wide and Prince Drake drew out only to have to be hustled in the closing strides as Immune came again. Sun Clothing, a long shot, was third from a slow beginning. Merovech was the third beaten favorite, and the winner paid $6.30.

Lucky Turn proved a lucky bet for his backers when he came through the stretch like an express train to win the fifth at a mile and a sixteenth. He passed General Lejeune in the last part to take the decision by a length and a half. Bellator had a minor part in the dash for the wire. Lucky Turn hung up a $36.50.

DREAM KISS, in the thick of contention from the beginning, was kept under stout handling while on the outside of the leaders, continued strongly and wore down LADY WESTWICK in the closing sixteenth. LADY WESTWICK was rushed hard to take command, met persistent bids in the first half-mile, but faltered approaching the finish. SMALL DEVIL was under stout handling from the start, saved ground and held on willingly for the closing test.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PROTRACTOR, $5.10, $4.20, $2.70; TRUE CHARM, $4.60, $3.60; CLEAR KNIGHT, $4.30.

PROTRACTOR, prominent early, challenged strongly approaching the home stretch, wore CLEAR KNIGHT down and had enough in reserve to stall off TRUE CHARM. Latter was hard ridden to hold a contending position in early racing, responded to punishment in the final drive and closed full of run. CLEAR KNIGHT shook off BOBBY BUXTON when midway of the turn, saved ground, but weakened fast in the last furlong.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PRINCE DRAKE, $6.30, $4.70, $4.60; IMMUNE, $6.00, $5.00; SUN CLOTHING, $10.20.

PRINCE DRAKE, hustled into a forward position during the opening furlong, followed IMMUNE closely until reaching the turn, took command under pressure and was hard urged until the finish. IMMUNE bore out entering the stretch after being displaced but continued courageously and was catching the winner slowly. SUN CLOTHING bettered his position steadily between horses and came with good energy in the closing strides. DEAR ZIN was strongly ridden and saved ground for the entire trip. ARDOR had speed in spots. CABOCHON could not threaten the leaders. FISH TUSH went evenly. MEROVECH broke well, but raced in dull form and can do better. QUEENS FLAG displayed speed for a half-mile.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:25. Off at 4:28. Winner, Ascot Stable's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—AEGIS, $5.40, $4.00, $2.50; LEANA G., $21.90, $7.10; WITAN, $2.80.

AEGIS, sent into a slight lead in the early stages, met stiff contention from WITAN in the first five furlongs, responded strongly when the final drive came, and just lasted to withstand LEANA G. Latter, rated in close pursuit of the leaders, remained on the outside when placed to a drive, then came strongly, to finish wearing the winner down steadily. WITAN forged to a determining lead in the stretch, namely in the closing drive. SPARKY came wide into the home stretch, but finished fast. FEUDAL LORD was in trouble during the early racing. He came willingly after reaching the home stretch. HIGH TORQUE went prominently until reaching the home stretch, then failed to rally under a drive. CAKE WALKER had no mishaps. The others were held safe.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:55. Off at 4:57. Winner, W. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LUCKY TURN, $36.50, $10.70, $6.20; GEN. LEJEUNE, $6.90, $3.20; BELLATOR, $3.30.

LUCKY TURN, steered to the outside after reaching the back stretch, gained fast in the last half-mile, then closed with a rush through the stretch run to get up in the last sixteenth. GEN. LEJEUNE raced BRIGHT BIRD into submission, was steadied until forced to a drive, but could not meet the winner's rush in the last stages. BELLATOR gained steadily on the inside when put to a drive, made a bold effort midway of the home stretch, but faltered approaching the finish. BLACK FALCON showed a good effort. BLIND BROOK was poorly handled. DUNBAR was badly messed about. BRIGHT BIRD stopped.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:25. Off at 5:25½. Winner, T. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ARMY GAME, $11.70, $4.80, $3.70; SUN ABBOT, $3.50, $2.50; KALOLA, $2.60.

ARMY GAME, hustled to the front going to the first turn, sprinted clear when reaching the back stretch, was placed to intermittent punishment during the last half-mile, and held on willingly after being strongly challenged at the final furlong pole. SUN ABBOT, reserved off the pace for six furlongs, went into contention rapidly, drew on almost even terms with the winner, but hung approaching the finish. KALOLA raced in nearest pursuit of the winner in the early stages, then held on steadily when the real test came. GOODY GOODY was in close quarters on the inside in the last three-sixteenths and could not find racing room. HAPPY EASTER had no excuses. KIBITZER and POLITEN were outrun.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:55. Off at 5:57. Winner, M. A. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SUN CLOISTER, $6.50, $3.80, $2.30; SMEAR, $2.70, $2.20; HARKY, $2.40.

SUN CLOISTER, away clear and fast, sprinted into a long lead early, saved ground, then held on gamely to withstand SMEAR. Latter broke in a tangle while being handled at barrier, was badly blocked at first turn when Gilbert attempted to drive through on inside, went to the outside on the back stretch and closed with a rush after making up much ground. He appeared much the best. HARKY went in closest pursuit of the winner for seven furlongs, then weakened. SHASTA STAR went evenly throughout. RETRIBUTION was unable to menace at any stage.

At the Post . . .

Dear Al, Havre de Grace Race Track, Md., April 17.

Those in charge of this race track are wondering why the owners and trainers of big stables are not entering their horses in races here. Today's mediocre program was not the fault of Racing Secretary Charles J. McLennan. The condition book showed a "Class B" handicap and an overnight handicap, the Virginian. At closing time for entries only four horses had been named, so in order to have larger fields, McLennan was forced to fall back on the claimers. Of course, the big stables will be represented in the heavy-money races, but, as far as the majority of horses are concerned, it looks as if this track has become a training ground for New York and New England. The Vanderbilt stable is an exception. Trainer Stotler has sent his horses to the post in droves and has seven entered tomorrow. Daily Double Dan is sore because he hasn't anything to do up here, but he says to wait for Pimlico. Two winners today for the boys. BILL.

First race—Canimar has been trying to escape the maiden ranks for some time. Gets in a field here that seems to fit. With Porter to do the hustling, I expect no mistakes. Royal Command has shown flashes of form and may be prominent. Ten Law for the show end.

Second race—Sighting Bar is in clever hands and both trials and races indicate that this one is ready to crack down. Critchfield is a better rider than generally rated. Carver failed over at Bowie, but a fast track might help him. Squawker for the show.

Third race—Canrock showed a game winning effort at Bowie. Just how he will operate on a fast course, I do not know. However, he's far too promising to be placed elsewhere than on the top. Galla and John Tio to complete the money circle. Clocker Mike reports brisk moves by Old Dominion.

Fourth race—Nautch, one that developed a habit of running out at the turns, has reformed and will be a tough horse to beat from now on. Might find the crack C. V. Witney pair of Mister Gander and Today in need of a race. Bachelor Dinner to show.

Fifth race—Sang Froid was beaten by Boston Brook last out in the big "poison handicap" at Bowie but I believe Sang Froid was pounds the best. Merritt put up a rather stupid ride but even at that the finish was so close the decision was booed. The fast-working Enthusiasm may surprise.

Sixth race—Slipper King is in rare form. Won at a route, won in a sprint and now comes back to a distance again. Meets formidable opposition while carrying top weight but I'm stringing along. Alladin's Dream and Chartres for the remainder.

Seventh race—Inferno Lad is in excellent shape now and may upset the entry of Flaxen and Foreign Lady. Clocker Mike leans to Almadel Jr. and says have no fear of Apprentice Leonard.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DREAM KISS, $38.40, $11.50, $8.40; LADY WESTWICK, $8.40, $4.50; SMALL DEVIL, $7.10.

DREAM KISS, in the thick of contention from the beginning, was kept under stout handling while on the outside of the leaders, continued strongly and wore down LADY WESTWICK in the closing sixteenth. LADY WESTWICK was rushed hard to take command, met persistent bids in the first half-mile, but faltered approaching the finish. SMALL DEVIL was under stout handling from the start, saved ground and held on willingly for the closing test.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:20. Winner, R. Robertson's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PROTRACTOR, $5.10, $4.20, $2.70; TRUE CHARM, $4.60, $3.60; CLEAR KNIGHT, $4.30.

PROTRACTOR, prominent early, challenged strongly approaching the home stretch, wore CLEAR KNIGHT down and had enough in reserve to stall off TRUE CHARM. Latter was hard ridden to hold a contending position in early racing, responded to punishment in the final drive and closed full of run. CLEAR KNIGHT shook off BOBBY BUXTON when midway of the turn, saved ground, but weakened fast in the last furlong.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PRINCE DRAKE, $6.30, $4.70, $4.60; IMMUNE, $6.00, $5.00; SUN CLOTHING, $10.20.

PRINCE DRAKE, hustled into a forward position during the opening furlong, followed IMMUNE closely until reaching the turn, took command under pressure and was hard urged until the finish. IMMUNE bore out entering the stretch after being displaced but continued courageously and was catching the winner slowly. SUN CLOTHING bettered his position steadily between horses and came with good energy in the closing strides. DEAR ZIN was strongly ridden and saved ground for the entire trip. ARDOR had speed in spots. CABOCHON could not threaten the leaders. FISH TUSH went evenly. MEROVECH broke well, but raced in dull form and can do better. QUEENS FLAG displayed speed for a half-mile.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:25. Off at 4:28. Winner, Ascot Stable's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—AEGIS, $5.40, $4.00, $2.50; LEANA G., $21.90, $7.10; WITAN, $2.80.

AEGIS, sent into a slight lead in the early stages, met stiff contention from WITAN in the first five furlongs, responded strongly when the final drive came, and just lasted to withstand LEANA G. Latter, rated in close pursuit of the leaders, remained on the outside when placed to a drive, then came strongly, to finish wearing the winner down steadily. WITAN forged to a determining lead in the stretch, namely in the closing drive. SPARKY came wide into the home stretch, but finished fast. FEUDAL LORD was in trouble during the early racing. He came willingly after reaching the home stretch. HIGH TORQUE went prominently until reaching the home stretch, then failed to rally under a drive. CAKE WALKER had no mishaps. The others were held safe.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:55. Off at 4:57. Winner, W. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LUCKY TURN, $36.50, $10.70, $6.20; GEN. LEJEUNE, $6.90, $3.20; BELLATOR, $3.30.

LUCKY TURN, steered to the outside after reaching the back stretch, gained fast in the last half-mile, then closed with a rush through the stretch run to get up in the last sixteenth. GEN. LEJEUNE raced BRIGHT BIRD into submission, was steadied until forced to a drive, but could not meet the winner's rush in the last stages. BELLATOR gained steadily on the inside when put to a drive, made a bold effort midway of the home stretch, but faltered approaching the finish. BLACK FALCON showed a good effort. BLIND BROOK was poorly handled. DUNBAR was badly messed about. BRIGHT BIRD stopped.

The Prophet Wins Middleburg Hunt's Closing Day Feature

With Shirley Povich

NOTHING occurred yesterday at Griffith Stadium to disturb whatever convictions there may be that the Nats are fated for something better than the second-division berth to which expert opinion has consigned them in the 1935 pennant race.

POVICH.

The 21,000 who saw the Nats seize a 4-to-0 lead and ultimately beat the Athletics, 4 to 2, saw a Washington team that hit opportunely if not well; saw a machine-like infield cut down the Athletics with three swell double plays; saw a rookie begin to justify the kind things the correspondents down South had said about him and saw a veteran pitcher shut out the Athletics for seven innings.

That Earl Whitehill weakened in the eighth was not a shocking surprise. Never during the training period had he pitched more than seven innings. His strikeout of Jimmy Foxx in the opening inning with two men on base and a 3-to-2 count on the A's slugger was evidence that he still possesses his devastating curve ball. That he was tiring was obvious, but the cold day was not conducive to the best pitching by a chap of Whitehill's age.

Four consecutive hits by the array of left-handers, where the batting power of the Nats is concentrated, were a manifestation of the potency of the club's attack. In his new role as the clean-up hitter, Johnny Stone met his first test with a wicked drive into right field.

BUT the item that made the deepest impression yesterday in the play of the Nats was the manner in which Cliff Bolton conducted himself behind the bat. For the scoffers, who doubted his ability to graduate into the regular catching role vacated by Luke Sewell, Bolton made good at the first asking with a sensational play in the opening inning.

The Nats' young catcher was on the qui vive, or something, when Moses dashed for second base in what was supposed to be a double steal on Whitehill's strike-out pitch to Foxx. Bolton wasted no time in getting off a perfect throw to Myer at the appointed spot just short of second base, and when Cramer raced home from third, Bolton was awaiting him with Myer's return throw. He was knocked 10 feet into the dust by the collision at the plate, but he came up with the ball.

And there was Jake Powell, the local boy who apparently has made good. Powell, whom Bucky Harris calls the best right-handed bunter in baseball, justified Harris' statement with his bunt in the seventh inning. The ball he laid down between Foxx and Bill Dietrich was a perfect effort and there was no chance for a put-out as Powell sped to first base.

Most of Harris' hopes that Powell would provide the Nats an ideal lead-off man were crowned with success yesterday. Twice he got on base, by his bunt and a walk, and twice his speed on the bases was felt by the A's. In the second inning he scored all the way from first when Moses booted Myer's single in the outfield, and in the seventh he raced down to second so fast there was no chance for a force play on Myer's grounder.

THERE was nothing wrong, either, with the performance of the Nats' new shortstop, Lyn Lary. He was the middle man in one double play, and when he went behind second base for a sensational stop on McNair's hit through the box in the fifth inning it was a sample of his wide range of play.

If Lary's predecessor at the post, Joe Cronin, had fielded that same ball, it would have been a put-out at first base, but Lary does not possess the throwing arm that Cronin owns. However, with all due respect to Cronin, he would never have reached that ball which Lary came up with so cleverly. There was nothing wrong, either, with that bristling single Lary slammed in to left field in the eighth inning and his immediate steal of second base.

And it appears that Cecil Travis is no flash in the pan. The lad has taken on polish since supplanting Ossie Bluege at the third-base job last summer. McNair's grounder that he fielded in the sixth inning with the bases full was no set-up, and the double play that he started in the eighth with the tying runs on base was the pinnacle of the art. He can also hit.

It's about time Bucky Harris was breaking into this column, so I am happy to point out that it was Harris who, in the eighth inning, when Whitehill was obviously weakening, placed necessity before sentiment and removed the southpaw from the game. It wasn't a poor choice he made, either, when he named Jack Russell as his relief pitcher.

Is Ruth Just One of the Lucky? Maybe It's Enthusiasm for Job

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, April 17.—The question that kept me awake part of last night was, What is it about exceptional men, such as Babe Ruth and Dizzy Dean and Max Baer, and one or two others I know of, that they seem to be able to lure fate or circumstance, or call it what you will, to make them the sole heroes on special occasions, to feed lines and situations to them and to them alone, and to set the stage and arrange the events so that the whole play seems to revolve around them and them alone?

There was that season opening-day game in Boston yesterday, for instance, where 18 men played in a ball game, and, when it was over, what happened was that 17 of them somehow had played minor and unimportant parts in the support of one great star. If ever one man seemed to have dominated a ball game, single handed, it seemed to have been Babe Ruth. And it was opening day, his National League debut and his first game with his new club. Why do things happen that way? Are there among us men who are really the darlings of the gods?

I often have thought that perhaps it is because of the way we who cover a game look at it, what we have in our minds when we go into the park, and whether we are not unconsciously helping a good story along with our viewpoint. There were other good men in that Braves-Giants opening-day game, played, toward the end, in a snow flurry.

Urbanski made three singles in a row against the great Carl Hubbell. Les Mahon each time sent him along with perfect bunts. Ed Brandt pitched a fine game, limiting the usually hard-hitting Giants to five hits. I thought the fielding of the Boston right and center fielders was brilliant and cut off many a hit.

Now, you can argue about any sports event as to what might have happened if so-and-so had not been in the game. But what you can not controvert is what happened because Babe Ruth WAS in the game. The final score was 4 runs to 2 in favor of Boston, and the winning margin was Ruth's home run over the far distant right field fence. But he figured otherwise as well. His single in the first inning drove Urbanski to score the first run and put him on base to score the second.

And the Giants admiringly admit that he great one-handed circus catch of Hubbell's almost certain single cut off what might have been the start of real trouble for Brandt. Three were out as a result instead of a man on base with the head of the batting order coming up.

How I admire those men and women who can make good spectacularly when the pressure is on, when scores of men are sitting at telegraph keys waiting to transmit the news of success and failure. I suppose one of the things that makes luck or fate so kind to Ruth is his perennial enthusiasm for the job.

Riding School to Stage Show Near Warrenton

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., April 17.—The Warrenton County School, which features riding, will hold its annual Horse Show Monday, May 6, on Mlle. Lea M. Bouligny's Farm, near Warrenton, the first class being called at 2 p. m. There are nine classes, six of which are open to all.

Yellow Jackets Win.

Ashland, Va., April 17 (AP).— Randolph-Macon College's baseball team this afternoon defeated Bridgewater, 5 to 3, although the visitors outhit the Jackets, 6 to 4.

Georgetown Faces Penn State Today, With Hargaden on Slab

A ROVING band of Penn State's Nittany Lions out for a kill will stalk across the Hilltop this afternoon with high hopes of adding Georgetown's diamond squad to their growing list of victims. The hunt begins at 3 o'clock.

But Mrs. Nittany's boys will find the Hoya hunting pieces well oiled and fully primed, and it may come to pass that the Lions' hide may grace Georgetown living quarters before the day is over. It is the second hand-to-hand skirmish of the season for the Blue and Gray, since they have been kept idle by inclement weather since losing the opener to Harvard.

Coach Ralph McCarthy last night delivered the pitching assignment into the capable hands of Ed Hargaden, the Syracuse side-wheeler. Hargaden winds up like an alarm clock, throws the ball as if making a single-hand basket, but withal manages to baffle the opposition. He showed to good advantage against Harvard and would have won the decision but for some rather radical support.

Georgetown enjoyed a brisk workout yesterday—its first outdoors in two weeks, and McCarthy, with true managerial optimism, predicted that his boys would be in there fighting—probably with the umpire.

Mount Takes Lead Near Finish

Oliver C. Falters After Setting Pace Until Final Jump.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

MIDDLEBURG, Va., April 17.—In a thrilling race in which four horses started, The Prophet, of the Flying Horse Farm, a permanent winner of the Virginia Gold Cup, and ably ridden by his trainer, Jack Skinner, won the feature race, the Glenwood, a 3-mile timber race, this afternoon on the closing day of the spring race meet of the Middleburg Hunt.

The Prophet won in ten seconds less time than his stablemate, Melita, II, who took the same feature last year. The race started with Mrs. T. H. Somerville's chestnut gelding, Oliver C., well ridden by Noel Laing, in the lead.

Oliver C. set a fast pace and kept ahead of the field, always jumping well. On the last lap of the course, Skinner brought his horse close to the flying chestnut's heels. It was nip and tuck from that time to the end. The Prophet lost time at the jumps but made it up between fences. It was at the last jump that the big bay of the Flying Horse Farm took the lead. Oliver C. could not beat off The Prophet's challenge any longer and the beautiful bay came in a length and a half ahead.

Oliver C. Is Second.

Oliver C. was second and Alvin Untermeyer's Bagatelle third. Mrs. Vadim Makaroff's Gigolo, ridden by W. B. Street, did not make a showing in the race.

Paul Mellon's fine steeplechaser, Drinmore Lad, easily took the flat race of one and half miles, the last number on the program. Coming out of a bunched field, the Lad overtook the leader on the last lap and came in a good 12 lengths ahead. Miss Lucy Stone's Starwink was second and Mrs. Gould's Fly Along third.

The afternoon's program started with the Wanquepin, a mile and a half hurdle race, which was inaugurated this year. Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Old Bachelor repeated his triumphs of Saturday by winning by four length, with Mrs. Paul Mellon's Bad Bob, with R. B. Young in the saddle, as his closest contender, placing second. Bad Bob took the lead at the post, and was soon overtaken by Bill Street's Fox Play. Old Bachelor started from the post in fourth place.

Argonaute II Victor.

Three horses started in the Panther Skin, a 2½-mile brush race. Noel Laing's Fairy Lore, ridden by Laing, took the lead at the start and kept it until the last jump in the race. It was then that Northwood Stable's Argonaute II, ably ridden by J. V. H. Davis, went to the front, and, although Laing tried to beat off Argonaute's challenge, he was unable to do so, and the brown son of Helion and Aglavene came in four lengths ahead.

The Little River, a 2-mile brush race, with 12 entries, was divided. In the first section Mrs. Howard C. Fair's Massapequa, ridden by Lyman Wright, triumphed. In the second half, John E. Hughes' Royal Riot, ridden by C. Brooks, was victorious.

There were two spills in this race. Steel Trap, belonging to Mrs. Lida R. Tompkins, of Washington, and ridden by her son, F. M. Tompkins, went down at the second jump, and it looked for a while as if both rider and mount were seriously injured. Young Tompkins was taken from the field in an ambulance. This was his first brush race. Morgan Massey, on Northwood Stable's Pimlico, went down at the twelfth jump and broke his collar bone.

The Wanquepin, 1½ miles over hurdles—First, Old Bachelor, Mrs. John Hay Whitney, ridden by W. Bethel; second, Bad Bob, Mrs. Paul Mellon, ridden by R. B. Young; third, Fox Play, William B. Street, ridden by S. Hirst. Time, 2:29 3-5. Also ran, Dunrillin, Royal Thomas, High Pay, Rollicking Princess, Lady Lawyer, Election Day, Larry Damm and Flying Feathers.

The Panther Skin, 2½ miles brush race—First, Argonaute II, Northwood Stables, ridden by J. V. H. Davis; second, Fairy Lore, Noel Laing, owner and rider; third, Handsome II, W. B. Street, owner and rider. Time, 4:52 1-5.

The Glenwood, a 3-mile timber race—First, The Prophet, Flying Horse Farm, ridden by J. T. Skinner; second, Oliver C., Mrs. T. H. Somerville, ridden by Noel Laing; third, Bagatelle, Alvin Untermyer, ridden by R. C. Duffey. Time, 6:34 1-5. Also ran Gogolo.

The Little River, 2-mile brush race—First, Massapequa, Mrs. Howard C. Fair, ridden by Lyman Wright; second, Some Hero, Mrs. S. R. Legare, ridden by S. Hirst; third, Jaunty, Mrs. Howard C. Fair, ridden by Julian Marshall. Time, 4:36 4-5.

Second division—First, Royal Riot, John E. Hughes, ridden by C. Brooks; second, Aughrim Boy, Mrs. J. E. Ryan, ridden by W. R. Cocks; third, White Lightning, S. A. Baltazzi, ridden by S. Hirst. Time, 4:40 2-5.

The Groveton, 3-mile timber race—First, Laguna Secca, Charles E. Perkins, ridden by H. W. Frost; second, The Mole, Mrs. George Eustis, ridden by J. V. H. Davis; third, Drapeau, Alvin Untermeyer, ridden by R. C. Duffey. Time, 6:25 4-5.

The Covert, 1½-mile turf race—First, Drinmore Lad, Paul Mellon, ridden by J. E. Ryan; second, Starwink, Miss Lucy Stone, ridden by R. G. Duffey; third, Fly Along, Mrs. Frank M. Gould, ridden by S. Hirst. Time 2:36 2-5. Also ran—Swept Lacruse, This Choice and Aries.

Tech High May Miss Relays; Funds Low

Also, Squad Not in Shape for Penn Classic, Says Hardell.

TECH HIGH SCHOOL, long a power in scholastic events at the Penn Relays, is confronted with the serious possibility of withdrawing its entry from the 1935 edition of the historic classic, April 26 and 27.

Coach Hap Hardell, producer of Tech's interhigh champions of last year and of the mile relay team, which has won its specialty in the classified high-school mile race at the Penn Relays for several years, explained yesterday that lack of funds, combined with other reasons, may keep the school from going to Philadelphia.

"We haven't enough money now to carry out our track program," said the coach. "If we make this trip, it will mean we won't have money for some other part of the schedule. It is doubtful whether we will go. The chances are we won't."

Hardell pointed out that each boy on the track squad who made the trips to Newark and Charlottesville this winter for indoor sports had to pay expenses in the neighborhood of $2 to $3 from his own pocket.

The coach also said the cold weather has prevented proper development of the squad for a meet like the Penn Relays and that he figures the time could be better spent concentrating on preparation for the interhigh, Navy Plebe, Central "C" Club and Maryland interscholastic meets.

Penn State Trims Navy's Nine, 4 to 0

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., April 17.—Taking advantage of some loose fielding by the home team to score a brace of runs in the opening frame and smacking out three hefty blows that accounted for a run in each of the next, Penn State College defeated Navy here today, 4 to 0.

Steady pitching of Frank Smith throughout was sufficient in itself to hold the Tars at bay, but sharp infielding behind him nipped two rosy chances that came the way of the Middies to send runners home in the fourth and fifth innings. Smith also stole the show in hitting, pounding out a homer, triple and single in four attempts.

Colonials' Nine Tops L. I. U. in Duel, 1-0

DeAngelis Gives Up Only Two Hits; Singles in Winning Marker.

A COUPLE of college baseball teams forgot themselves yesterday and played a swell game in the unbelievable time of 1 hour and 33 minutes—or just about half the usual time necessary. It happened as George Washington aced Long Island University, 1-0, on the Ellipse Field.

Vince DeAngelis, George Washington hurler, and Marius Russo, of Long Island, hooked up in a pitching duel that would have done credit to a big leaguer. DeAngelis was braiding his curves all afternoon and Russo was just as fancy.

But the Colonial slab artist was just a little more potent than his rival with the mace and it was his clean single to center, scoring Melpolder from second, that won the ball game.

Allows Two Hits.

In the box DeAngelis was well nigh invincible, as the box score so eloquently discloses. He set the visitors down with two hits, fanned five and walked only two. Not until midway in the fifth did Long Island hit safely.

Russo was a trifle more ineffective, giving up five hits, although he struck out nine and walked only one batter.

Terp's Triple In 9th Beats Virginia

Hartenstein's Hit Scores McAboy; Cavaliers' Rally Futile.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., April 17.—Hartenstein's triple in the ninth inning, scoring McAboy, who had singled after one was out, gave Maryland a well-earned 3-to-2 victory over Virginia here today in a bang-up contest that attracted a large crowd.

In the last half of the ninth the Cavaliers threw a scare into the ranks of the Old Liners when two pinch hitters opened with singles. The rally was ended, however, when McAboy made a double play unassisted, and later tossed out Hoff at first.

Vic Willis, Maryland's giant right-hander, twirled for six innings, giving way to Merriman, who yielded but three hits in as many frames. Virginia scored one run in the first inning, but Maryland took the lead in the second on hits by Nelson, Daly, McAboy, Sothoron and Stonebraker netting. The Cavaliers knotted the count in the fifth, when Male opened with his third single of the contest and tallied when Daly dropped his long fly.

Four Double Plays.

Both teams fielded sharply, Maryland completing three double plays and Virginia one. Outstanding were Daly's running catch of Lucas' long foul and Male's stop of Stonebraker's sizzling grounder.

Sothoron and McAboy led with the stick for the Old Liners, while Male starred for Virginia.

Capt. Orlin Rogers, Cavalier southpaw, twirled a creditable game, striking out eight and issuing a lone pass. Thrice he fanned Keller after the Maryland center fielder had greeted him with a triple in the opening frame.

The schedule:

February 1, V. M. I., Lexington, Va.

March 7, Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia.

Whitehill, Russell Hold A's in Check

A's hits, if placed end to end, wouldn't reach to second base. Joe Kuhel made an unassisted put-out on Pinch Hitter Coleman's grounder, Russell struck out Hooks and then he took Cramer's tap down the first-base line to tag the batter out.

It was well that Russell held the A's in check, because Bill Dietrich, on the mound for the Athletics, permitted few liberties in the last two innings. Jake Powell, the local boy who has made good, did give a manifestation of his speed by beating out a perfect bunt in the eighth inning, and Lyn Lary produced a smashing single in the ninth, but the Nats' scoring had ended with the second inning.

Stock Market Prices Decline In Late Trades

Liquidation of Rails Helps to Unsettle Market Sentiment.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—Selling of rail stocks and bonds finally got on the speculative nerves today and all sections of the stock list dipped in the late trading.

The periodic nervousness over the carrier situation which has set off selling several times in recent weeks came to the fore again as the Chicago & North Western announced its intention of postponing payment of the interest due May 1 on its 4¾ per cent convertible bonds.

The road's president announced that advantage was being taken of the 60-day-grace period allowed under the bond indenture, and that it was his opinion that the interest would be paid within the allotted time.

By focusing attention on a known weak spot in the financial picture, the announcement was sufficient to reverse the moderate showing of strength which had appeared in some other sections of the stock market in early dealings, and fractional losses were the rule among leading equities at the close.

Wheat Selling Lowers Grains

Realizing Sales Take Cotton Down 14 to 18 Points.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 17.—Unexpected strength developed in corn late today, and prices climbed to a new high record since January, but abruptly reacted owing to wheat weakness.

May delivery of corn took the star role as a result of focusing of trade attention on unusual scantiness of Chicago stocks of corn needed for settlement of May contracts. Spreading operations in wheat between here and Kansas City accounted largely for wheat weakness.

Corn closed nervous ⅛@¾ under yesterday's finish, May, 89⅛@89¼; wheat weak, 1⅞@2⅜ down, May, 1.00½@1.00⅝; oats, ⅝ to 1 cent off, and provisions at 5 to 10 cents decline.

Cotton Market.

In cotton today the reactionary tendencies of yesterday were repeated. There was further liquidation and realizing, and the close was barely steady at net declines of 14 to 18 points. Liverpool and the continent were credited with buying, but the Far East was a seller and business otherwise was confined to evening-up for Easter holidays.

Selling increased during the afternoon following weakness in grain, and declines of 16 to 18 points brought in increased trade buying, but rallies were not maintained and closing quotations were at or within a few points of the lowest.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil closed easy today at declines of 17 to 18 points on sales of 109 contracts. ### Effort to Rally Bankers of Nation Against Pending Bill Fruitless; Unit Banks of West and South Indifferent; Pacific Coast Likes Law.

By a Special Correspondent

New York, April 17.—Efforts of a group of conservative New York bankers to rally banking opinion in general and the American Bankers Association in particular against the pending banking act to 1935 are understood to be meeting with indifferent success. It is now apparent that the Nation's bankers are divided into several distinct groups with regard to this legislation, and that it will not be possible to fuse these groups into one united front against the bill.

On the eve of the significant hearings on the measure before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, it now appears that no witness will be able to testify that the rank and file of bankers throughout the country would rather see no legislation on banking at all, than to have the Administration measure passed. Furthermore, even if Title II of the bill revising the Federal Reserve System were separated from the rest, as Senator Glass wishes, unified banking opposition to Title II would not be in evidence.

Most but not all heads of large metropolitan banks, especially in New York, Boston and Chicago, are strongly against the reorganization of the Federal Reserve System provided in Title II of the measure. They greatly dislike and fear the very high degree of political control which would be imposed on the system. They are concerned about the possibility that the Reserve System may be loaded down with questionable assets at some future date if the eligibility requirements now applicable to commercial paper presented for rediscount by member banks should be taken out of the law. Also, the enormous centralization of power, including the authority to raise or lower member bank reserve requirements at will, is held dangerous in the hands of a political administration which would seek to coerce banks to make loans and investments that the institutions feel would not be prudent.

State Bankers Only Seek to Stay Outside Reserve System.

One the other hand, the rank and file of unit State bankers of the Middle West and South are but slightly interested in this controversial Title II of the pending bill. They are generally not members of the Federal Reserve System at the present time, and they would like to retain their status of nonmembership indefinitely. The present law requires that all State banks which are members of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation must join the Federal Reserve System by July 1, 1937. These State bankers, it is understood here, would be quite ready to indicate their support for the Administration banking bill if a provision were added permitting them to retain deposit insurance without having to join the Federal Reserve System.

A number of New York bankers are on record as favoring greater unification of the banking system. Accordingly, there is little basis for a "deal" whereby Western unit bankers would oppose Title II, while city bankers would favor in turn, removing the requirement for compulsory membership in the Reserve System for insured State banks by July, 1937.

On the other hand, bankers in certain communities, especially in the Pacific Coast area, are frankly favorable to the bill for the very reasons that conservative Eastern bankers oppose it—because it loosens rediscount requirements and broadens the power of commercial banks to acquire mortgages. In particular, many banks that have large portfolios of mortgages now would like to see the bill pass because it might help start a new real estate boom and so permit the liquidation of many mortgages and parcels of real estate now held by them.

Giannini Favors Bill As Aid to Bank Stocks.

The attitude of a number of Pacific Coast bankers is probably best represented by a statement contained in the annual report of the Transamerica Corporation, which is headed by A. P. Giannini. "In the opinion of your board," says this annual report, "the proposed banking act of 1935 is constructive and constitutes a step forward in banking legislation. Should it be enacted substantially in its present form or with amendments now being considered, the safety and soundness of bank stocks as a medium of investment would be all the more enhanced."

There is still another group of bankers, some of whom are officials of large city institutions, who fear the political effects of outright opposition to a banking measure to which the Administration seems extremely partial. These include the men who helped engineer the "public reconciliation" between the bankers and the President at the annual meeting of the American Bankers Association in Washington last fall. Sponsors of that episode had hoped to prevent radical central banking legislation thereby. Despite their apparent failure to do so, they continue fearful of an open rupture with the Administration.

Hence, particular interests and sectional conditions seem to stand squarely in the way of a broad national viewpoint among the bankers themselves toward the pending banking bill. However, the conservative element in the banking community hopes to make a strong case against Title II at the forthcoming hearings on the measure before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Phone Service Up 3,000 Units During Quarter

Rise to 192,000 Stations Tops Low Mark by 19,000.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

Telephones in service in the District of Columbia showed a net gain of more than 3,000 units during the first three months of 1935, it was learned yesterday. This compares with a increase of 112,000 telephones in the entire country during the initial three-month period.

Installations here have climbed steadily from the low of 172,675 recorded in August, 1933, and at the end of March had passed the 192,000 mark. On the last day of March, 1934, local phones in service totaled 181,324, a gain during the year in excess of 10,500 units.

Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., of which the local Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. is a subsidiary, addressed the annual meeting of stockholders in New York yesterday. He reported a most encouraging outlook for the company, as gaged by the steadily increasing number of telephones in service.

In the course of the meeting Gifford revealed that his yearly salary was $206,250 and that no bonuses were paid. When questioned regarding the agitation for lower rates, Gifford answered that in his 31 years in the telephone business he could not recall a time when lower rates were not being sought. If means for decreased rates can be devised, he declared, they will be put in effect.

He also disclosed that A. T. & T. was giving serious consideration to the question of refunding its bonds.

Wolfe Heads Brokers.

Ralph M. Wolfe, manager of the local office of Mackubin, Legg & Co., has been installed president of the Ticker Club for the coming year. Chauncey Parker, jr., a partner in the firm of Auchincloss, Parker & Redpath, was named vice president, and John E. Parker was elected to the post of secretary and treasurer, vacated by Chauncey Parker's advancement.

The Ticker Club is composed of managers and partners of brokerage offices operating here and for many years has ranked as the outstanding group of its kind south of New York. Thomas W. Brahany, Washington representative of E. A. Pierce & Co., and Ferry K. Heath, co-resident manager of Harriman, Keech & Co., were elected to the club's board of governors. Brahany is retiring president of the organization.

Stock Trading.

Capital Transit stock opened at 18⅝ on the Washington Stock Exchange yesterday, a new low mark on the present move. Only five shares changed hands. The stock closed with 18½ bid and 19 asked.

Riggs Bank common opened at 215 and closed at 216 on a light turnover, while the preferred stock moved at 111.

Mergenthaler Linotype was active, six consecutive ten-share sales being recorded at 30. In the bond division there was a $1,000 transfer in Barber & Ross 6½s. The bonds closed with 20 bid and 30 asked.

"Business Is Improving."

Business throughout the country is definitely improving, Ralph T. Crane, of Brown, Harriman & Co., and president of the Investment Bankers Association of America, told a group of bankers in Baltimore yesterday.

Crane based his report of improving business on observations made during a coast-to-coast tour he just completed.

He stressed the importance of refunding operations, as the first step in reopening the capital markets and increasing industrial activity and employment.

Business Conditions Are Best In Five Years, Says Babson

By the United Press.

Augusta, Ga., April 17.—Business conditions are distinctly better, Statistician Roger W. Babson declared tonight.

"Whatever the reasons, it surely is true that business conditions are better this spring than any spring during the past five years," said Babson, speaking before the "family dinner" of the executive council of the American Bankers Association.

"Notwithstanding the pessimistic talk that there is today, conditions are distinctly better. How much of this is due to natural recovery and how much is due to Government expenditures is, of course, debatable.

Gives 10 Reasons.

"I have a hunch that the new business caused by Government expenditures about offsets the business lost due to the undermining of confidence brought about by these expenditures."

Babson gave ten explanations for improved business:

1. Bad situations are continually being cleaned up with a reduction in private, corporate and municipal debt.

2. Inventories, both of raw materials and manufactured goods, are gradually but constantly declining.

3. Retail sales are increasing both in dollars and volume, which means that employment must increase in the factories to replace the goods being sold.

4. Dividend disbursements including back taxes on preferred issues are constantly increasing.

5. Collections are better and are continually improving. In most cases these are running about 6 per cent above a year ago.

Failures at Low Figure.

6. Failures are at a very low figure and foreclosures are constantly declining.

7. Farm income is increasing irrespective of Government aid.

8. Notwithstanding the attack on the utilities, electric power production is ahead of a year ago and is running higher than it has for several years.

9. Railroad car loadings are holding up very well and many systems are running ahead of last year. Although the railroads are showing poor net earnings, due to heavy fixed charges and overhead costs, yet, with a future volume of business, even approaching 1929, surprisingly good net earnings would immediately develop.

10. The Supreme Court decisions and the general attitude of the Administration are becoming more conservative.

Call Money Rate Officially ¼%, Lowest on Record

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—The official rate for call money was lowered today to one-fourth of 1 per cent, establishing the lowest cost for such credit in the history of Wall street's money market.

The former rate was one-half of 1 per cent which had been the lowest posted on the New York Stock Exchange since May 3, 1904. Since December 7, 1933 the official rate had been pegged at 1 per cent.

Following the revision today on the stock exchange, outside call money also was marked down to one-fourth of 1 per cent. A slightly easier tone developed in the time money market. Funds available at the low rates posted today are obtainable only against the highest grade of readily marketable collateral.

Records covering the last half century indicate that prior to 1904 a rate as low as one-half of 1 per cent had not been posted on the stock exchange since 1894.

Gillette Razor Net 40½ Cents

Earnings Compare With 25¾ Cents for First Quarter of 1934.

New York, April 17.—Gillette Safety Razor Co. consolidated income account for the quarter ended March 31, 1935 (certain foreign subsidiaries for the three months ended February 28, 1935) shows net earnings of $1,198,663, equivalent to $3.87 per share on the preference stock, and after preference dividend requirements for the quarter, to 40½ cents per share on the common stock. This compares with 25¾ cents earned on the common in the corresponding quarter a year ago. After paying the March 31 dividend on the common stock and interest on debentures due April 1, the company and its subsidiaries (exclusive of certain small foreign balances and funds not at present convertible into dollars) had a total of $5,448,-519 of cash and U. S. Government obligations at market value.

The Reading Co. reports for the first two months of 1935 net income of $682,023 after taxes and charges, equal, after first and second preferred dividend requirements to 15 cents on the common stock, compared with $1,388,756, or 65 cents a common share in the first two months of 1934.

Beech-Nut Packing Co. reports for the quarter ended March 31 profit of $472,672 after charges but before Federal taxes. This compares with profit of $444,192 for the March quarter last year. The balance, after allowing for estimated Federal taxes, and dividends on 7 per cent preferred stock outstanding, was equal to 93 cents a share on the common stock against 87 cents a share in the 1934 period.

Crucible Steel Co. Business Advancing

"Orders received and shipments at the present time," said Wilkinson, "show an increase of about 15 per cent over the average for the year 1934 and an increase of about 40 per cent over the average for the last quarter of 1934.

"The volume of the company's business is steadily increasing and the management anticipates that this will continue."

C.&N.W. Holds Back Interest

May 1 Payment on Bonds Deferred; Road Plans No More Borrowing.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—Directors of the Chicago & North Western Railway Co. decided today to defer interest due May 1 on its 4¾ per cent convertible bonds under the 60-day grace period permitted by the indenture. At the same time the company announced it would pay all other interest and equipment trust maturities due in May and June. There are approximately $72,300,000 of the convertibles outstanding.

"We are not going to borrow any more money," declared Fred W. Sargent, president, following the board meeting. "If we can not pay our way out of earnings then we will have to take some other measures!"

Mr. Sargent added that he was hopeful of some reasonable pick-up business. "If we get it we will be all right," he said.

In a statement explaining its action, the board said it was taken "after careful consideration of the present cash position of the company and the immediate requirements this spring for large tax payments and other heavy expenditures for air-conditioning, and the fact that the largest part of the company's taxes are due in the first half of the year."

As to whether or not the interest will be paid at the end of the 60-day period depends on various factors, said the statement. These were listed as the Supreme Court decision on the constitutionality of the rail pension law; the collection of freight revenue claims against the Government, and, "most important," the character of crop yields in the Northwest this year.

Illinois Central.

Chicago, April 17 (AP).—L. A. Downs, president of the Illinois Central system, told stockholders at their annual meeting today he hoped to avoid any further borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation this year. He presented a resolution of the directors asking authority to merge 13 subsidiaries companies north of the Ohio River with the parent organization and to issue a new mortgage which would cover the consolidated properties. This proposal was ratified.

The road has borrowed $62,000,-000 since the start of 1930, but has retired $57,000,000 of the obligation, Mr. Downs reported. He said that although the railroad situation is critical, Government ownership is not the solution.

Sinking Rails Give a Shock To Bond Mart

Chicago & North Western Issues Hammered Down in Selling.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—A fresh sinking spell in railroad issues gave the bond market another shock today just as it was adjusting its sails to a higher course.

Announcement that the Chicago & North Western Railway would defer interest payments on its 4¾ per cent convertible bonds for 60 days in order to get a breathing spell was not altogether unexpected because this particular issue had long been under pressure, but the action itself was sufficient to bring in review the whole unpleasant railroad situation, and bonds of other carriers were dragged down by the undertow.

Industrials were inclined to cut loose and find their own way into higher territory, but utilities became frightened and stood still. High grade bonds were sensitive to small offerings and tilted backward, while United States Governments held fairly steady.

Six separate issues of North Western bonds were hammered down 2 to 3½ points under heavy offerings. The convertible 4¾s, on which interest was deferred, closed at off around 3½ points. The 6½s and the general 4s got off with comparatively light declines, however, and a single sale in the general 3½ was made at an advance of a half-point.

The Government division commanded increased attention from traders, the turnover being $2,440,-000, against $1,720,000 on Tuesday, but the net result indicated a bargaining spirit prevailed in most tranactions.

Transfers aggregated $11,254,000 par value, compared with $9,456,000 on Tuesday.

Textile Mill Activity Up 5% for Quarter

New York, April 17.—Textile mill activity, gauged by consumption of raw material, was 5 per cent greater for the first quarter of 1935 than for the corresponding period of 1934, Textile World will report in its April issue. "It was about 2 per cent below the activity of the 1924-31 average, roughly assumed as 'normal,'" according to the publication's preliminary estimates.

"March prices, as shown in Textile World's price index number, continued the downward trend, with raw wool showing the greatest decline. Wool has lost 44 points in the last 12 months and was lower in March than at any time since May, 1933. Yarn and cloth indices in both the cotton and wool groups declined less than the respective raw materials, gray cotton cloth, for example, losing only two points while raw cotton declined seven points."

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, April 17 (AP).—(U. S. Dept. of Agriculture.)—Semibright medium quality fleece wools were having a fair call. Combing 48s, 50s ¼ blood lines were bringing 90@93, scoured basis. Strictly combing Ohio wools of similar grades were quiet, but were available at 23@23½ in the grease for graded lines. The scoured basis equivalent of these prices is being currently estimated at 40-43c. Unraded lines of mixed grades of medium, or ⅜ and ½ blood, middle West fleeces were reported moving at around 21@22, in the grease, for the better semibright and the heavier bright wools.

Total gold holdings, $1,013,000.
Note coverage, 2.44 per cent.

Foreign Exchange.

French francs declined .00⅜ of a cent to 6.59¼ cents. Dutch guilders held unchanged at 67.48 cents and Belgian belgas declined .02 of a cent to 16.93 cents. The dollar was comparatively steady in Paris.

In London the dollar rate was only slightly changed, closing at 4.85 and in New York sterling dipped ½ cent to 4.85¼.

Curb Irregular, Mostly Lower

Utilities Are Firm; Fajardo Sugar Among Strong Specialties.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 17.—The curb market was slightly upset today, but price changes were generally narrow and trading dwindled on the reaction, transfers approximating 138,000 shares, compared with 169,000 Tuesday.

A few specialties displayed independent strength. Among them were Fajardo Sugar, Pan-American Airways and Mead-Johnson, advancing 1 to 2 points or so. Utilities held fairly even throughout the session. Alcohols were lower.

Hiram Walker, Distillers Corporation-Seagram, New Jersey Zinc, Gulf Oil, Swift Internacional and International Petroleum receded fractions to about a point. Steadiness was maintained by Lake Shore, Electric Bond & Share, Wright-Hargreaves and American Cyanamid "B."

Object— Not Matrimony

By Lillian Barker

On her eighteenth birthday, Katrina Harman receives two great shocks. She discovers that her fortune has been lost, and that Tazewell Bronson has no intention of marrying her, although he offers to be her "protector" and pays her debts, to the extent of several hundred dollars, for which she gives him her I. O. U. She determines not to see him again. She leaves one job, when he finds out where she is working; then goes to work as a companion to an elderly woman, Mrs. Fremys-Dillon. He discovers her again, comes to see her and tries to explain his position, that he has seen so much of unhappy marriages, including his own parents', that he fears to marry.

"A LOVELESS marriage, as you say, would be unbearable for me, too," Tazewell answered Katrina. "It would have to be marital bliss or complete separation, divorce, unpleasant and painful as that is. That's why I intend to be doggone sure of myself before taking the matrimonial plunge.

"But," smiling abashedly, "from the way I'm talking, Trina, you must think I'm awfully selfish; that I'm considering only my own interest and not yours. This isn't true, however, for your welfare and your happiness mean everything to me. You believe that, don't you, precious? You also believe I love you."

"In your way, yes," she conceded. "Otherwise, why would you have driven all the way down here at midnight to drag family skeletons out of their closet; to make your intimate and none-too-easy-to-make confession? I appreciate your confidence, Taz, and I understand you lots, lots better.

More Explanations.

"I want you to 'get me right,' too, though, for I must've given you a very wrong impression when I misinterpreted you that last night."

Katrina's voice trailed off and her cheeks flushed. She'd started something, an explanation of her own, that it was going to be difficult to finish.

Finish it she would, however. So she resumed: "Hard as it may be for you to believe, never before I made that mistake had I thought about marriage at all. Definitely, I mean. Bearing that in mind, you can imagine how you made me feel. I was sure you'd figure I'd had designs upon you; that I'd been trying to ensnare you all along; that my one and only object in going with you, unlike yours in going with me, had most decidedly been matrimony. And I thought I'd die of shame."

"Bless your heart!" Taz was kissing her hand again, one finger after another. "We were both in a spot, weren't we? You because of your false imaginings, since I'd never once figured you had designs on me, that you'd set out to ensnare me. And I because . . . well, because I was afraid by marrying you . . . assuming you would've had me, which may be assuming entirely too much . . . I'd mess up your life and make you just desperately unhappy. And yet——"

He Was Contrite.

Tazewell gazed at the opposite wall with its frieze of mermaids frolicking through blue-green waves, but without seeing either mermaids or waves. And after moments and moments of such abstraction he resumed:

"Yet when I discovered you in that restaurant, a waiter's tray in your hands, I blamed myself entirely for your deplorable situation. For, inasmuch as you wouldn't permit me to protect you without marriage, in marriage you would've had to let me look out for you. Feeling I'd failed you in your greatest hour of need, remorse has almost driven me crazy."

Sympathetically moved and at the same time stiffening with pride, Trina said: "You shouldn't have been remorseful. It wasn't in the least your fault that I . . . that I took you overseriously. After all, you were a man of the world, while I was just an inexperienced schoolgirl, in love with love and romance."

Independent Now.

"You were—and still are—adorable."

Though the compliment thrilled her, Katrina let it pass and continued: "But I'm not a schoolgirl any more. I am a woman now, independent and without illusions. And the last thing I want or need is pity, so don't thrust any on me, please. With my grand job, my sumptuous living and my world tour to look forward to, who could want more? I couldn't, certainly."

"You're a great kid, honey. A marvelous character and wouldn't I be proud if—if you were my wife? Gee, conscientious objector to matrimony that I am . . . or rather, that I've been up till now . . . I feel my resistence to the 'holy bonds' getting weaker and weaker. Yeah, such is the fect of your nearness upon me. You're so sweet and so . . . so tempting!"

Employer Wanted Her.

Taz Bronson's words, his ways, his voice! For all her stiff-necked pride Katrina was under their magic, their irresistible power again. Under their spell, and in Tazewell's arms—till the approaching steps of a hotel maid, the same one encountered in the hall, startled her out of them.

"I'm sorry to butt in like this," blurted out the girl, "but Mrs. Fremys-Dillon is throwing a fit in her bedroom. She's had all the night force searching for you: clerks, bellhops, maids."

"No?" Trina, half-dazed and on her feet, murmured: "I left her asleep . . . I was sure she was still sleeping soundly."

"Well, she isn't. She's wide awake and calling for you with every breath," informed the maid, "and if you'll excuse my saying so, Miss, you'd better hurry."

All concern, he whispered: "I'm so sorry. So terribly sorry, darling. Do you think the woman will scold you? If I've gotten you into a jam it's up to me to get you out of it. I'll just go and tell her the fault's——"

"No, no, no," in vehement protest. "If you really do want to help me you'll leave the hotel at once. I told the old lady, swore to her I had no boy friend, not one who'd ever distract me by calling or phoning. And if she saw you here at midnight! You must leave immediately, Taz. Do as I tell you. Alone. I can quiet Mrs. Fremys-Dillon down. Easily and quickly, I know I can, for she likes me."

Might Be Fired.

Breaking away from Tazewell, who seemed disposed to linger, Katrina shot on down the great length of the hall, a streak of black and flashing rhinestones. But those two ominous figures she glimpsed from afar, those two men, one with a key in hand, the other with a small satchel, what were they doing in front of the Fremys-Dillon suite? The man with the key, it soon became alarmingly evident, was a night clerk. And the other, he was holding a doctor's kit . . . so he surely was a doctor!

How could she quiet her neurotic patient down, "easily and quickly?" Could she quiet her down at all? Quaking with fear, Trina ran faster . . . and faster.

But Mrs. Fremys-Dillon would not listen to reason. Katrina was fired! Out of a job again!

Back in her same little old box of a room, which, only five days before, she was sure she'd left forever, Katrina, looking down on a squalid court, at paper litterings and scattered boxes, repeated those tormenting words. Silently and aloud. Aloud and silently.

Employer Was Furious.

True, returning to the suite after her excursion into the hotel parlor with Tazewell, she had feared possible inability to pacify her hysterical employer and she'd even braced herself for some small censure, some slight rebuke. But nothing could have prepared Trina, truant that she'd been, for the vituperations and the self-styled "semi-invalid"—in reality no invalid at all—had hurled at her across the foot of the bed, where she stood trembling and waiting for an opportunity to defend herself. All in the presence of clerk, hotel doctor and hotel maid, too, that trio huddled near one side of the bed.

"You little liar, you deliberate deceiver!" That had been the opening accusation of the tirade. A lambasting that the doctor couldn't stop, either with his "be calm, compose yourself" advice or with the hypodermic of morphine he'd just administered.

No, resolved to let Katrina know exactly what she now thought of her, Viola Fremys-Dillon, propped up by pillows, a vertible mound of them, continued:

"Other companions have disappointed me but you, you who won my confidence so completely, have proved the greatest disappointment of all. You vowed to me, convinced me, that you didn't have a boy friend in the world. Not one. And here, on our very first night in Atlantic City, when you knew I'd sent away my nurse and was depending upon you, wholly and solely, for company and any . . . any necessary attention, what has happened?

"A man has had the audacity to come to my suite! And you," with a shaking of the fist, "you have had the audacity to sneak away with him to a hotel parlor 'way after midnight."

Apology Refused.

"I'm dread——" Katrina attempted to wedge in an apology and an explanation. But her denouncer, again heedless of the doctor's counsel to "keep quiet so that the morphia might take effect," denounced:

"All that was bad enough, your sneaking out. You didn't even stop there, however. Oh, no, off in that parlor alone, you, for all your ladylike appearance and refined manner, allowed that intruder-into-my-apartment to caress and embrace you. And if this . . . this maid here hadn't passed you in the hall on your way to the parlor . . . the girl who finally located you and your midnight caller for the clerk and for me . . . you'd still be there in that parlor no doubt, a party to such scandalous, disgraceful carryings-on."

Preemptive Jumps.

Preemptive jumps to four, made either originally or as overcalls, can sometimes steal games from even the strongest of opposition.

On the hand below South stepped in with a four-spade bid after his right-hand opponent had opened the bidding. By so doing, he not only shut the opponents out of a lay-down game of their own, but managed to fulfill his own contract through faulty defense. The key to South's play of the hand was in his very intelligent failure to false-card on the opening lead. This put the West player up against an almost impossible guess.

East dealer.

| East | South | West | North |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1◇ | 4♠(1) | Dbl.(2) | Pass |
| Pass(3) | Pass | | |

1—A gambling preemptive bid, possibly about one playing-trick shy in view of the vulnerability, but South is optimistic about his distribution and hopes he will be able to make up, at least, one heart trick.

2—West is obviously up against it. He has support for his partner's suit, but does not know his partner's distribution and feels a five-diamond bid might be dangerous. If the East hand happens to be balanced in pattern, a sizeable vulnerable penalty will ensue and West finally decided, albeit, unwisely, upon the double.

The Play.

West opened the king of hearts, which held the trick. West could not regard East's six spot as encouraging when declarer played the five. Besides, West could not figure South for four hearts on a preemptive bid of four spades. So he switched the suit, leading the 10 of diamonds.

South won with the ace of diamonds, drew trumps and laid down the queen of hearts from the closed hand. West permitted this to hold the trick. Another small heart followed and, since East had shown out of hearts, every card of the suit was marked. The contract was made, East and West only getting two heart tricks and a club.

Schools List Best Spellers For County Bee

Matches in Full Swing as Prelude to Sectional Finals.

The spelling matches to determine school champions to take part in the county finals of the national spelling bee are in full swing and principals are making the announcement of their representatives.

For Montgomery County High School, L. Fletcher Schott, principal, has announced these winners: Ann Bouic, Betty de Lashmutt, Mary Dorsey and Annabelle Davis. Montgomery is one of 14 schools in the county which, because of their size, will be allowed four spellers in the county bee. Arrangements for that match will be announced shortly.

Winners Listed.

Four Loudoun County schools announced their champions yesterday. At McGraws Ridge School, Miss Mae D. Poland has announced Mabel Allison and Clarice Simpson as winners. Evelyn Martz and Guilford Welsh will represent Hamilton Elementary School, Mrs. V. Coleman Miller, principal, stated. Franklin Poland and James Rector are winners in Pleasant Valley School, Miss Frances L. Cockerill reports. Miss Bertha E. Gruver, principal of Purcellville Graded School, has announced two seventh grade pupils, Kenneth Brown and John Sinsabaugh, will represent the school in the Loudoun County match. This will be held at Leesburg High School May 4, at 2 p. m.

Miss Ella M. Beville, principal of Reliance School, announced her two best spellers as Donn Downall and Marge Sergeant. They will take part in the Warren County match May 3 at 7:30 p. m. in Warren County High School, Front Royal.

Schools Enrolled.

Other schools which enrolled yesterday, with the name of the principal or teacher in charge, are:

The afternoon meeting was begun with a pageant offered by the Orange County high schools of Barboursville, Mine Run, Madison Run and Rapidan.

Mother of 9 Ends Life With Razor in Hospital

Special to The Post.

Frederick, Md., April 17.—Mrs. Wilbert Reinhart, 54, mother of nine children, committed suicide at Montevue Hospital early today by slashing her throat with a razor blade. She had been taken to the hospital yesterday after threats to end her life.

It is believed she concealed the blade in her shoe. She had been despondent for some time. She was the wife of an unemployed carpenter. Magistrate Patrick M. Schnauffer, acting coroner, returned a verdict of suicide.

Man Gets Year's Term On Mails Fraud Charge

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Clarksburg, W. Va., April 17.—Sherman F. Friedman was sentenced to 12 months in the Marion County Jail at Fairmont and fined $500 by Judge William E. Baker in Federal court here on his plea of guilty to using the mails to defraud.

The indictment charged him with obtaining money from Gimbel Bros., of New York.

The Federal Diary

Trade-Mark Registered U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

BAKER.

RENTS are exorbitant and housing conditions here now are more critical than at any time in the history of the Capital, according to answers to nearly 1,000 questionnaires circulated among Government employes by the District Federation of Federal Employes Unions.

"A definite shortage exists in virtually all forms of housing," declared William S. Kinney, chairman of the committee on home ownership and rentals of the District federation.

Widespread "tenement" conditions exist, the employe leader points out.

"We find in our survey that as many as four or more persons occupy a one-room apartment or a single furnished room. Many workers find they can not bear the expense of individual living quarters and thus are compelled to 'double up.' Furthermore, high rentals charged for these accomodations place them out of the range of the family with but one wage earner."

Recent arrivals in Washington have been unable to bring their families here because of the desperate lack of living accommodations, the questionnaires reveal.

Washington business men are suffering, Mr. Kinney says, since large numbers of workers are settling in nearby cities because of high rents here and the lack of suitable quarters.

"In the great majority of cases," he continues, "those whose incomes are less than $3,000 a year pay rentals which are far out of proportion to their income. We learn too, that rents are much higher in Washington than in other cities. The District federation has collected definite information bearing out this contention.

"To make matters worse, we find both real estate men and renters of units in private homes more and more are assuming a 'hard-boiled' attitude—a 'take it or leave it' attitude, apparently feeling secure now that waiting lists are the rule rather than the exception.

"We also have learned that in some instances agents are requiring prospective tenants to rent without seeing apartments."

Word received by friends of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Wallenstein at Patent Office tells of their becoming parents of an 8-pound boy, born Monday. Mr. Wallenstein resigned last month from Patent Office to engage in private practice in Chicago.

New Efficiency Ratings.

That The Washington Post is ever alert in the interest of Government employes, supporting every sound project advanced for improving their status, is clearly shown in the two following letters on the new efficiency rating system:

To the Editor of The Post—

Sir: The commission has read with approval the constructive comment in your editorial on the subject of "Efficiency Ratings" in The Washington Post of April 8, 1935, and desires to take this opportunity to express its appreciation for your support of the merit system in the public service.

H. B. MITCHELL,
LUCILLE FOSTER M'MILLIN,
LEONARD D. WHITE,
Commissioners of the United States Civil Service Commission.

To the Editor of The Post—

Sir: I wish to express my appreciation of the exceptionally well-written editorial in The Post of Monday, April 8, on the subject of efficiency ratings. It shows an insight into the problem.

The presentation is one of the best that has come to my attention. L. J. O'ROURKE,
Director, President's Council on Personnel Administration.

HOLC Postettes.

Miss Evelyn Willing, Stenographic Pool, went to Louisville last week to be bridesmaid at the wedding of a friend. She gave herself a treat as last month she was quarantined three weeks for mumps.

Matthew Gault, Associate General Counsel, emerged with the sun this week. He has been confined to his room in the Army and Navy Club ten days with the flu.

REPORTS at Federal Housing Administration indicate that F. C. Straat, office manager, is slated for a field position. And this move, the history of FHA shows, is a step toward the exit. Straat, said to be a Republican, it is recalled, figured in the personnel confusion at FHA last fall and winter. The personnel turnover reached 20 per cent a month in that period, resulting in widespread administrative chaos that was censured by proponents of the merit system, members of Congress and labor leaders.

Diary Guest Tickets.

I F, P or C follows your name in this column, call in person on the Federal Diary editor today between 4:30 and 6 p. m. You will receive tickets to one of the following Loew's Theaters: (F) Loew's Fox (stage, "Spices of 1935" and other acts, screen, Paul Lukas and Alison Skipworth in "Casino Murder Case"); or to (P) Loew's Palace (second week of Bing Crosby and Joan Bennett in "Mississippi"); or to (C) Loew's Columbia (Will Rogers in "Life Begins at 40").

Matthew W. Stirling, chief, Bureau of American Ethnology, Smithsonian, will give an illustrated lecture at 8:15 p. m. today at the Strong John Thomson School. His subject will be "The Headhunters of Eastern Ecuador—Jivaro Indians." Government employes are invited to attend.

John E. Dwyer Elected.

AAA Compitroller's Office Lodge No. 116, AFGE, announces the following officers were elected at its April meeting:

John E. Dwyer (F), president; R. P. Adkins, first vice president; E. M. Hawley, jr., second vice president; Mrs. Sadie Henry (C), recording secretary; M. P. Hyde (C), corresponding secretary; D. C. Kessler, treasurer; C. A. Rainey, sergeant, and the following directors: Adolph Green, J. A. Minnicker, D. R. Stansbury, T. A. Goss and Hyman Lewis.

Joseph Landow, retiring secretary, presided at the election meeting. He was not a candidate for an office this year because of pressure of work. However, he pledged his support to the AFGE.

Many prominent officials of the department are expected to attend installation ceremonies May 21, including Secretary Henry A. Wallace and Administrator Chester C. Davis. All employes of AAA will be invited.
